CENTRAL WEST LETTER

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

Omaha

In spite of the most vigorous activities of the police authorities and the imposing of unusually severe penalties upon convicted yeggmen, the Central West is still wrestling with an epidemic of bank and postoffice robberies which, of late, seem to have increased rather than diminished. April 25th the State Bank of Giltner, not far from Grand Island, Neb., was entered by robbers who wrecked the safe and building and secured about $2,000 of which $982 was in silver. The police of Grand Island were notified and the following day a posse of a hundred men captured three suspects on an island in the Platte River. They gave the names of Harry Forbes, Charles Taylor and John Adama and said they were from Chicago. A quantity of dynamite was found on one of the men. Later one of the suspects was identified as Arthur Gray, who, according to the police, served ten years for another bank robbery. Two other men suspected of having taken part in the Cushing Bank robbery were arrested at Altoona, Neb., and are being held. They gave the names of Ed Mack and John J. Surley.

Nebraska had another successful bank robbery on April 28th. Four men rode into Naponee in an automobile early in the morning, blew up the vault of the Naponee State Bank and escaped with $2,000. Citizens who were aroused by the explosion, could do nothing as they were threatened by the bandits who compelled them to seek shelter. Early in the morning of April 27th an attempt was made by four men to rob the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Centralia, Okla., twenty miles northwest of Vinita. The charge of nitroglycerin that wrecked the safe and building did not break the inner strong box of the safe which contained the bank's funds. The bandits escaped.

The four men who have been under arrest for several months charged with complicity in the robbery in the Beattie State Bank, Beattie, Kan., on the night of November 8, 1910, and the robbery of the Waterville, Kan., bank on the night of December 30th, are now facing trial at Maryville. These men are Neil Mulcahy, Alex. Muenard, Henry Hoerr and Frank Wheeler. At Wichita, Kan., on April 29th, Judge Thomas Wilson of the district court took advantage of the stringent new law of Kansas applying to bank robbers when he sentenced the four men found guilty of robbing the State Bank of Viola, Kan., to twenty-five years each at hard labor in the penitentiary. The law permits a maximum sentence of thirty years. The four men are Thomas Madden, Thomas Redmond, Fred Boyd and Ed. Harrold. They robbed the post-office and bank at Viola the morning of March 7th last. Governor Stubbs of Kansas has issued a requisition on the governor of Nebraska for the return to Kansas of Charles McKenzie who is charged with being the leader of a bank-robbing gang that has operated extensively in Kansas and Oklahoma the past fall and winter. McKenzie will be tried specifically on the charge of looting the bank at Hudson, Stafford county, Kan., early in April at which time a watchman at a nearby mill was shot and killed.

The Bank of Rosemont, Neb., was entered by robbers early last Tuesday morning and the safe was blown after the third explosion. The robbers secured $1,500 and escaped.

Confusion over Guaranty Law

The long-promised report of the expert accountants who have been examining into the condition of the Oklahoma state bank deposit guaranty fund has been made. Instead, however, of throwing intelligible light upon the matter that is uppermost in the mind of every state banker in Oklahoma, the report seems to throw the whole subject into unutterable confusion. The report is supposed to cover all transactions relative to the guaranty from the time the law went into effect, March, 1908, until January 30, 1911. A circular letter which accompanies the report is signed by G. D. Davis of Claremore, president of the Oklahoma Bankers Association, C. D. Rorer, of Shawnee, secretary, and M. S. Runyan, of Chelsea, treasurer, and says that the duty of making the report fell upon the officers of the association "after waiting for over three years for the state officials to make a full, complete and comprehensive report to the state bankers, without avail."

An introduction to the report signed by the expert accountants making it says: "It is necessary to preface our report by referring to the incompleteness of records available. Our examination contemplated a complete audit of the affairs of each bank which failed or has required assistance, but such audit has not been possible. In the case of the Columbia Bank and Trust Company which failed in Oklahoma City on September 29, 1909, certain absolutely essential records have disappeared, such as the discount register, general cash journal, etc., nor have we found such records as should make it possible to reconstruct those missing. Apart from individual banks, the records of the banking board are incomplete and inaccurate from the time of organization until the last few months and we have been further hampered by confusion due the transfer of the records from Guthrie to Oklahoma City."

Hopeless confusion marks the condition of the Oklahoma guaranty fund. It is said that

General Banking Notes

The Security Loan and Investment Company is the title of the new corporation recently organized to do a general loan and investment business in Oklahoma City, Okla. The capital is $50,000 and the directors are O. B. McKee, J. E. Moore and R. A. Huber of Oklahoma City.

Tulsa, Okla., is one of the western towns that is making steady headway in its bank clearings. During the past week Tulsa's nine financial institutions exceeded the $800,000 mark.

The Farmers' State Bank of Hanna, Okla., has been incorporated with a capital of $15,000. The directors are L. J. Spillman, W. W. Winston and Gilbert Huls of Hanna, John W. Gilliland and T. T. Godfrey of Holdenville and C. W. Henry of Raiford, Okla.

Recent changes in banking circles at Harper, Kan., have resulted in the consolidation of the Security National and the Farmers' State banks. John G. Parker, who purchased the controlling interest in both banks prior to the consolidation, will be president of the new institution which will be known as the Security State Bank.

A bank has been organized at Saragosa, Tex., with a capital of $15,000. E. M. Saltweather is cashier.

Frank Allen of Gower, Mo., for many years vice-president of the Gower State Bank, died April 30th on a train on his way to Colorado. When the train was near Hastings, Neb., the porter tried to awake the apparently sleeping man when it was discovered that he was dead.

He was very prominent in Northwestern Missouri financial circles.

The First National Bank of Miles, Tex., has been organized with the following directors: W. A. Cox, president; R. A. Grimes, vice-president; Dr. T. L. Treadway and Will S. Davis, Jr., cashier.

The Commerce Trust Company of Kansas City has received bonds to the amount of $1,000,000. They are Fort Worth, Tex., bonds purchased by the trust company and were delivered by Rufus Coy, of the Western National Bank of Fort Worth.

Hutchinson, Kas., is to have a new bank building which will be perhaps the handsomest office structure in that city. It is to be erected by the First National Bank which will have quarters on the first floor. The remaining five stories of steel and concrete will be devoted to professional uses.

IMPORTANCE OF NASHVILLE MEETING

The real importance of the Nashville meeting can better be estimated, not by the large amount of routine business accomplished, but by the very practical start which was made for the advancement of currency and banking reform. Mr. J. B. Forgan was selected to offer the key note speech, giving the country at large the real position of the currency commission of the American Bankers Association upon the so-called Aldrich plan. No better choice could have been possible even from the membership of this powerful organization. Mr. Forgan at one time halted the entire procession with a sharp warning that the chief collateral of the West, prime short time commercial paper, was not being recognized. The warning was heeded and now that considerable advance has been made he has been chosen as the banquet orator at Nashville to start the campaign of education.

That trust companies and state banks shall be cared for in the National Reserve Association is the new gospel. They outnumber the nationals and their advocates secured their recognition as depositories of the postal savings banks. The past week an important sub-committee of the currency commission met in Chicago and were entertained by Mr. Forgan, the acting chairman. This is a straw which would indicate that the great banking body wants to see state chartered institutions admitted to all benefits to which similar sized nationals are admitted. This is the only fair plan and it will shift the financial control of the new reserve association much farther west than if nationals alone are allowed to participate. The proposed banking plan will fall short just as it fails to recognize all chartered and inspected forms of banking in all the states. Mr. Forgan's address is beyond criticism as the fairest, ablest exposition of what should be done in the guise of the Aldrich plan, and will have much to do with gaining that public approval which all important proposed legislation must have to become a law.

THE PROFITABLE SIZE FOR BANKS

Banks and banking have been figured both ways from the middle, ends against the middle, and in every other way. Yet it remained for Comptroller Murray to demonstrate that there is a best size as to capital when it comes to dividends and surplus. A lengthy compilation has been made which indicates that banks with capital less than $50,000 have the lowest percentage of surplus to capital, 27 per cent, although the law requires an accumulation of surplus of only 20 per cent of the capital. Banks with capital of $1,000,000 and less than $5,000,000 have the highest percentage of surplus to capital, 82 per cent. Banks with $1,000,000 to $5,000,000 paid the highest average rate of dividend to stockholders during the past year, or about 12 per cent; and those with less than $50,000 paid the lowest, or slightly over 8 per cent. Banks with capital $5,000,000 and over held the largest proportion of reserve to individual deposits, or about 45¾ per cent; and banks with $50,000 held the lowest, or 7.4 per cent. LORIMER BANK ANNIVERSARY

LaSalle Street National Bank of Chicago is celebrating its first anniversary. Senator Lorimer and his associates established the bank May 9, 1910, with capital of $1,000,000 and surplus of $250,000. There has been unusual interest in watching the progress of the new institution owing to the terrific fight of the newspapers against Senator Lorimer, which is popularly supposed to be aimed as much at the bank as at the noted political leader himself. No greater test of friendship has ever been seen than that through which the friends of the senator and his bank have passed. Throughout the persecution deposits have steadily mounted until they foot up more than three and a quarter millions. This would be a good record in any circumstances. Stability has been given to LaSalle Street National by an unusually strong directorate, which embraces men who have a hearty interest in the success of the bank and who are showing the utmost loyalty to the officers. The stockholders on Tuesday elected the following board of directors: William Lorimer, John M. Roach, George O. Gunderson, C. B. Munday, J. M. Appel, Elbridge Haney, John I. Hughes, James E. Bennett, William J. Moxley, Joseph Hock, P. M. Hanney, Thos. Magner, Lorenzo E. Anderson, Leonard J. Lorimer, Paul F. Beich, William Lorimer, Jr., W. A. Gardner, Chas G. Fox, J. P. Gallagher, B. G. Brennan.

Messrs. Hock, Hanney, Magner, Gallagher and Brennan are new members. The election of officers will take place next Tuesday. Numerous messages of congratulation are being received by Senator Lorimer at the flattering success of his bank.

ELWOOD A. COLE IN TOWN

Elwood A. Cole, former cashier of the Commercial German National Bank, Peoria, and who recently resigned to take up the management of the financial department of the Avery Manufacturing Company of Peoria, called on Chicago banking acquaintances Wednesday. In a conversation with officials of the Central Trust Company of Illinois Mr. Cole said he always expected to take a lively interest in the subject of banking, particularly the meetings of the Illinois Groups and the State Association, that his twenty years or more of banking experience had brought him a pleasant acquaintance among Illinois bankers and that he held them in high regard and hoped to continue the pleasant relations that he had so long enjoyed. He spoke in high terms of his successor, William Hazzard, who has been appointed cashier of the great Commercial German National Bank.

ELECTRIC MERGER STIRS PUBLIC

There was much interest in La Salle Street over the announcement of the prospective merger of the North Shore Electric, Economy Light and Power and Illinois Gas and Electric companies. There was no official report as to the price at which the several concerns would be taken over by the new corporation which is to be organized. There was, however, talk of par for North Shore Electric and 65 for Economy Light and Power.

Illinois Valley preferred and common stocks were mentioned as going in at a price which seems unreasonably high. Last fall Illinois Valley preferred was sold to the public at 85, with a bonus of 25 per cent in common stock. Early this year more of the preferred stock was sold at 85 without a bonus. Commonwealth Edison interests control the corporation.

JAMES B. FORGAN'S ADDRESS

serve Association, not the small amount of legal reserve money it carries, will determine its strength and standing.

In periods of financial stringency, instead of scrambling with one another for the legal reserve money, which is now the erroneous measure of their strength and stability, banks will learn to rely on the convertibility of their liquid assets into an available circulating substitute for legal reserve money, which will be more acceptable to the public than gold. No bank with sufficient convertible assets need go into the hands of a receiver for it will be feasible in case of necessity to liquidate such a bank through the National Reserve Association under the guaranty of the local organization. Any bank failing to keep a sufficient part of its assets in convertible shape will doubtless be warned of its danger and should it persist in ignoring such warning will be excluded from the local association and liquidated, probably before its affairs become so bad as to jeopardize its depositors. Under such an arrangement a well managed bank, with its loans in proper liquid shape, will be invulnerable against false fears and the "runs" begotten of misinformation.

It will do much to establish public confidence in the individual banks to have it known that they can get such assistance as they are entitled to when they need it; that when their deposits fall off or their available cash runs low they will be able to convert their liquid assets promptly into a legal reserve balance, from which they can have shipped to them as wanted a circulating medium, as good as gold; and all this without interfering with the legal reserve money massed in the National Reserve Association for the protection of the general situation.

Such a note circulation based on bank assets composed largely of commercial paper and issued under such conditions as would command for it public confidence would not only maintain the equilibrium between the commercial demand for circulating medium and the supply of it, but would make possible and practical the massing of the legal reserve money for the protection of the banks and the commercial interests depending on them. Moreover, it would safeguard and protect the legal reserve money itself when massed by doing away with the necessity of moving it from one place to another or otherwise interfering with it. There will be no occasion for well managed banks to become panic stricken, to call in loans and scramble for reserve money, each in the vain hope of strengthening itself at the expense of the others.

The authority which it is proposed to grant to national banks to accept, under proper restrictions, time drafts arising out of commercial transactions, will not only be of great assistance in the promotion of interstate and international commerce and in the movement of crops—especially cotton—and other commodities from their place of origin to their available markets, but it will also assist the banks in keeping their assets liquid and convertible.

A discount market, such as forms the strongest feature of London banking and that of other foreign financial centers, will be created for and by these acceptances. They will be discounted and carried by the banks as a secondary reserve and will largely displace for this purpose the demand loans now made in Wall Street against stock exchange securities.

The money now loaned on call at abnormally low rates in Wall Street, whenever a superabundance of it accumulates there, only to be withdrawn or to have the rates for it raised preposterously when it is required again for commercial purposes, will flow more steadily in the channels of commerce and follow more closely the demands of legitimate investment. In fact, a well organized discount market will tend to diminish the stock jobbing on which our present financial methods sometimes put a premium. It will adjust the volume of our circulating medium to the legitimate demand for it and will remove the cause of the unwarrantable fluctuations in the discount rates for commercial paper that mark our present system.

The volume of credit through the country will be controlled by the discount rate of the National Reserve Association. It will be raised to check overexpansion and lowered to encourage legitimate operations in accordance with conditions as they exist from time to time. The National Reserve Association will thus become the central power of a well organized banking system, at once its main strength and its guiding and controlling influence.

As a remedy for the next defect of our present system—that of compelling every bank to retain possession of its own proper proportion of the legal reserve money, Senator Aldrich's plan suggests the massing of the cash reserves of all the banks in the National Reserve Association. With an ample privilege of issuing its own notes, as a substitute for legal reserve money, the plan would, in my opinion, afford full protection of the reserves so massed. As already stated, there will be no interference with that part of the legal reserves of the banks represented by balances at their credit with their legal reserve agents. Only that part of their legal reserves which they now carry in their own vaults is to be deposited with the National Reserve Association and, when so deposited, will still count as part of their legal reserves. This requirement is 6 per cent of the deposits of banks outside of reserve and central reserve cities, 12½ per cent of the deposits of banks in reserve cities and 25 per cent of the deposits of banks in central reserve cities. This reserve aggregates something more than $900,000,000. The banks, of course, would not deposit with the Association all of their legal reserve money, but would retain as much as might be deemed necessary for the legal tender requirements of their depositors.

Some one has said that the "lawful cash reserves of a proper banking system should consist of one large reservoir of gold, the fluctuations in the amount of which should cause only a ripple on the surface." Under our present system we have a multitude of small reservoirs among which, even under normal conditions, there is a continuous movement of reserve money from one to the other which causes considerably more commotion than a mere "ripple on the surface." Whenever alarm overtakes us this commotion develops into a violent storm, which depletes and threatens to empty the large reservoirs at the country's financial centers. Public confidence is shaken as the contents of these main reservoirs diminish and widespread panic follows. The massing of the cash reserves in the National Reserve Association and the power it will have to protect them when so massed by issuing its notes as substitutes for lawful money will correct this defect of our present system.

This brings us to the consideration of the note issuing privilege of the National Reserve Association, which is the remedy proposed for the third defect of our present system. It is suggested that the national banks turn over to the Association their government bonds and along with them the note issuing privilege which the banks will no longer enjoy. I will discuss the turning over of the government bonds later. In the meantime let us consider the note issuing feature of the plan.

The National Reserve Association is to have the exclusive right of circulation, except that the national banks may maintain their present note issue without the right to increase it. This, however, they are not likely to do when they fully realize the advantages to be derived by the adoption of the plan suggested. The till money of the banks, outside of the government one and two dollar bills and silver for change, will consist almost entirely of the circulating notes of the National Reserve Association soon after the plan is adopted, and the clearing house balances of the country will be settled in the large denominations of these same notes.

They will also be issued for general circulating purposes, including pay rolls and the moving of the crops. The demand for them will fluctuate with the seasons. When crops are being moved the demand for circulation will be at its height and the maximum amount for which legitimate use can be found will be reached. At such times the banks will have to support their reserve balances with the National Reserve Association, against which they may have currency shipped to them, by rediscounting their available paper. As the business demand for circulating notes declines, they will return to the banks and through them to the branches of the National Reserve Association for credit on deposit. Simultaneously will mature the rediscounts on which the increased issue of notes was based. Thus, when circulating notes are shipped out, there will simply be a change in the form of the National Reserve Association's liabilities from that of deposits payable on demand to that of demand notes outstanding. When they return the transaction will be reversed, without in either case changing the proportion of lawful money on hand to the total liabilities of the National Reserve Association.

The lawful money reserve of the National Reserve Association will be but slightly affected by its domestic business transactions. So far as they are concerned, its cash reserves will remain practically stationary, except of course, as they may increase with the growing business and wealth of the nation. Its total liabilities will fluctuate as its rediscounts, prime acceptances purchased, or its other permissible investments fluctuate, and the aggregate amount of these it will control and regulate in accordance with the percentage of lawful money it has on hand as legal reserve against its liabilities. Any "ripple on the surface" of its lawful money reserve will occur principally through the withdrawal or the deposit of gold in connection with the settlement of foreign balances in accordance with the fluctuating balance of trade between this and foreign countries. Control of this will be in the hands of the management by dealing in foreign exchange and foreign government securities, carrying a line of foreign acceptances and maintaining foreign balances, all of which the National Reserve Association will be empowered to do.

The volume of the currency of the National Reserve Association will be adjusted automatically to the demand for it. It will be issued by the association as wanted and redeemed promptly whenever the volume becomes greater than the legitimate demand. An over-expansion of it will be practically impossible, if the limit of its issue is controlled by an ample cash reserve requirement against it and the direct tax on it, if any, is regulated by the fluctuating proportion of the cash reserves against the amount outstanding. This will be quite feasible and will be more practical than any attempt to fix an arbitrary limit upon the amount of its issue beyond which it shall be subject to a heavy tax. The amount for which its legitimate use can be found will fluctuate and as the country develops the amount will increase, so that any estimate of it is pure surmise. Therefore arbitrary limitations on it will prove embarrassing, obstructive to legitimate development and may bring disaster. Certainly the National Reserve Association should not be hindered in issuing its notes at any time against a deposit with it of a like amount of gold. The business community should have all it can use so long as it is covered by an adequate gold reserve. There can be no over-expansion of business or credit from an excessive issue of notes, so long as they are thus covered. I agree with those who consider it unscientific and wrong to tax such a circulation at all and I fully realize the danger of fixing an arbitrary percentage of lawful money that must be maintained against it. We have become accustomed, however, to fixed legal reserves in this country, and while I believe that such a management as is proposed for the National Reserve Association could be relied upon to maintain adequate cash reserves against both its depositors and its circulating notes, it might be well to place some minimum limit on such reserves, with a graduated tax on the deficiency while it lasts. The trouble is that the public mind accepts such a limit as an index of the safety point and becomes alarmed when the lawful money reserves fall temporarily below it. It is certain that the usefulness of the National Reserve Association will be greatly impaired and the proper exercise of its functions will be greatly impeded if it is not given the privilege of issuing, free from taxation, as large a volume of its notes as the banks and the public can find legitimate use for, so long as it maintains an adequate cash reserve.

Such a reserve should approximate fifty to sixty per cent against all liabilities—deposits as well as circulation—and, if an attempt is made to regulate it by a legal limit, a tax might be levied on any deficiency below the first named figure.

It is proposed that the National Reserve Association shall, upon application and without charge for transportation, forward its circulating notes to any depositing bank against the credit balance of the bank. It is not suggested by Senator Aldrich that these notes in the hands of the banks shall count as part of their legal reserves and some sound economists have objected strenuously to their being so counted. It seems to me however that these authorities adhere to their preconceived ideas against counting any mere promise to pay lawful money as part of a bank's legal cash reserves and fail to grasp the full force of the central idea on which the National Reserve Association is to be organized. This idea is that the National Reserve Association shall take over, maintain and control the legal cash reserves of the banks and that the banks will be relieved individually of these responsibilities. Were the banks to continue to be individually responsible as they are now for the redemption of these circulating notes, or were they to continue to be individually responsible for the maintenance of their legal reserve in lawful money, then, of course, the arguments against counting such notes as part of their required legal reserve would be unanswerable. But these are responsibilities of which the banks are to be relieved by the organization of the National Reserve Association. Under such an arrangement I can conceive of no difference between the deposit liability of the National Reserve Association, which is to count as part of the legal reserve of the individual banks, and its demand note liability. The notes should also be counted as reserve when in the possession of the banks. The difference is one of form and not of substance. They are convertible from one to the other at the pleasure of the banks, and in the first instance they are acquired by the banks in exactly the same manner and for precisely the same consideration—either the deposit of legal reserve money, or its equivalent, or the rediscount of available paper. Senator Aldrich's plan proposes that all notes issued by the National Reserve Association shall be covered to the extent of at least 33 1-3 per cent by gold or other lawful money, but it makes no suggestion as to the extent to which deposits shall be covered. However, in conferences with him concerning his plan I have learned that he now leans to the idea that a fixed reserve against both deposits and circulation should be maintained and that a tax should be levied on the Association, when its cash reserve falls below a fixed percentage of its total liabilities; this tax to be increased as the reserve declines. He still thinks however that circulation based on government bonds would not require to be covered by the same percentage of cash reserve that is required against deposits and notes covered by bankable commercial paper.

It seems to me it would be incorrect not to provide an adequate cash reserve for a demand liability, such as a note issue of this kind, simply because it is covered or collaterally secured by government bonds. The notes are payable in lawful money on presentation to the National Reserve Association without reference to any security, either pledged or held for them. Commercial paper maturing daily would form a much better secondary reserve, if not a better security for the notes, than would government bonds. A purchaser must be found for the bonds before money can be realized on them, whereas, in the ordinary course of business money is realized every day on commercial paper as it matures and is paid.

At the same time I think government bonds in consequence of their qualities of absolute strength and goodness form a solid foundation for such a note issue, provided an ample cash reserve is carried to provide for their redemption. As to the amount of such cash reserves, it would seem to be erroneous to attempt any discrimination on account of the different forms of the demand obligations of such an institution as the National Reserve Association. What is the difference whether they be specifically covered by any particular kind or pledge of security, or are simply protected by general assets? They are all redeemable in lawful money, and in whatever form they may exist, their redemption results in the same diminution of the cash reserves.

Inasmuch as government bonds are to form a very large proportion of the assets of the National Reserve Association, which is to have the privilege of issuing notes against them, it seems to me they should count as part of the legal reserve—mark the distinction—not cash reserve, and that they should count as such legal reserve to the extent of 50 per cent of their face value. The practical working of this suggestion would be that the notes to be issued in place of our present bank notes would, in the words of Senator Aldrich's plan, "be covered to the extent of at least one-half (his suggestion is one-third) by gold or other lawful money and the remaining portion by bonds of the United States or bankable commercial paper as herein defined, or both."

An estimate of the profits of the National Reserve Association, as a going concern, would seem to indicate that they would be ample, after providing a minimum legal reserve of 50 per cent against all demand liabilities, government bonds to count at 50 per cent of their face value in such reserve, and the remainder to be in gold or lawful money.

I offer the following as a rough estimate of the annual profits of the National Reserve Association. Its balance sheet, based on its paid in capital and deposits, after it has taken from the national banks such portion of their government bonds as they are likely to turn over to it during the first year, on its assuming responsibility for the redemption of the notes outstanding against them and before it does any other business, would be about as follows:

Assets
Lawful money received for capital	$100,000,000
Lawful money received for government deposits	100,000,000
Lawful money received for bank deposits	500,000,000

Bank deposits	500,000,000
Circulating notes	500,000,000
	$1,200,000,000

After it has been in operation a year it might be supposed to show a balance sheet about as follows:

Assets
Lawful money (as above)	$700,000,000
Government bonds	700,000,000
Loans and investments	200,000,000

Circulation	800,000,000
	$1,600,000,000

The annual income and expense account based on the business indicated by this balance sheet might be estimated as follows:

3% on loans and investments	7,000,000
	$21,000,000

bonds as part of it at 50 per cent of their face value, would amount to 70 per cent of the total liabilities as follows:

Total liabilities, $1,500,000,000, 70 per cent of which is.....$1,050,000,000
 Lawful money on hand$700,000,000
 $700,000,000 of government bonds at 50% of their face value 350,000,000 1,050,000,000

It would be conservative to provide that the preliminary expenses, including office fittings and furniture, should be a charge on earnings prior to any distribution of them and that any net profits, thereafter, on the first year's business should go to the surplus fund. The probabilities are that they would scarcely be worth distributing. However, my estimate of income and expenses after the business gets well under way indicates that the annual profits for distribution, on the basis suggested in the plan, would be sufficient to pay the maximum dividend of 5 per cent to the stockholders, pay $4,500,000 to the government and place a like amount in the surplus fund.

It is proposed in the plan that "after the stockholders receive 5 per cent per annum and the surplus of the National Reserve Association amounts to 20 per cent of the paid in capital, all excess earnings shall go to the government." This, in my judgment, and in the opinion of all the bankers with whom I have discussed the subject, would be most unwise. In two conferences of bankers which I have attended it has been agreed unanimously, that after the payment of the dividend to the stockholders, the government should receive two-thirds of the net annual earnings and one-third should be added to the surplus. A surplus of twenty per cent as a maximum would be entirely inadequate. It would not be amiss for the National Reserve Association to start, as most banks do nowadays, with that amount of surplus paid in and the stockholders' dividends adjusted to cover the additional amount thus paid in by them. No harm, in fact, nothing but good, would result to the National Reserve Association and all connected with it by allowing its surplus to accumulate indefinitely to the extent of one-third of the excess annual profits after the suggested 20 per cent limit has been reached. For at least a generation to come, in all probability, such an accumulation of surplus would not be more than enough to maintain a proper relation between its invested capital and its total liabilities. The charter of the Association is for fifty years and there will be no occasion during that period to suspend the accumulation of surplus and adopt the questionable policy of paying out all the annual earnings. We have large banks doing business now that have been in existence for fifty years and find it just as necessary to accumulate surplus to-day as they ever did. They would lose prestige if they did not. Let us try the experiment for fifty years and leave it to congress to make any readjustment of profit distribution found necessary when a renewal of the charter comes up for consideration.

There remains for consideration two important features of the plan, which of all the problems connected with it will probably be found to be the most difficult of solution. These are the disposition of the 2 per cent government bonds and the extension of the benefits of the new system to the state banks and trust companies. On the practical solution of these problems will depend the solvency of the National Reserve Association and the solidarity of the national banking system.

In connection with the government bonds it is proposed that the policy of the United States will hereafter be "to retire as rapidly as possible, consistent with the public interests, bond secured circulation and to substitute therefor notes of the National Reserve Association," which will be covered partly by an adequate lawful money reserve and partly by bonds of the United States, or bankable commercial paper, or both. For a period of one year the National Reserve Association must offer to purchase at par and accrued interest the 2 per cent bonds now held by the national banks and on taking them over will acquire the privilege of issuing circulating notes. "There is to be no further issue, beyond the amount now outstanding of bank notes by any national bank. National banks may, if they choose, maintain their present note issue, but whenever a bank retires the whole or any part of its existing issue it will permanently surrender its right to reissue the notes so retired."

This means that the national banks will ultimately surrender their government bonds and with them their present note issuing privilege, which will be enjoyed exclusively thereafter by the National Reserve Association. Before the government issued these bonds it had provided for them by the passage of the National Bank Act, an artificial and privileged market among the national banks, and when any bank now desires to dispose of them the same market is available to it. At the present time each of the 7,250 national banks has in the other 7,249 banks probable purchasers of its government bonds, because they all have the privilege of issuing notes against them. Concentrate, however, in one institution all the 2 per cent government bonds and the exclusive right of issuing notes against them and there remains outside of it no privileged market for them and no market at all other than a strictly investment one. No outside purchaser of government bonds would have any occasion to buy them except for simple investment. The present artificial and privileged market would be completely annihilated.

The National Reserve Association is to have the doubtful privilege after two years of disposing of them at the rate of $50,000,000 annually with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Having no fixed date of maturity government bonds are in the form of a perpetual investment. To market them on a 2½ per cent income basis would reduce their value by 20 per cent and on a 3 per cent basis by 33 1-3. If therefore the National Reserve Association should take over $700,000,000 of these two per cents at par it would hold in them an asset, the realizable value of which, in any possible open market for them, would be 33 1-3 per cent less than it paid for them. This depreciation would amount to $233,000,000, or more than twice the amount of the paid in capital the Association would have when it began business.

I have said that this is a difficult problem to solve, but clearly understood and squarely met it is not an insurmountable difficulty. I have stated the problem bluntly to attract attention to it and to demonstrate the fact that it must be solved prior to, or simultaneously with, the organization of the National Reserve Association, otherwise the national banks will not subscribe for the stock.

It is proposed that the government shall reserve the right to purchase at par from the National Reserve Association through the trustees of the Postal Savings Bank, or otherwise, any or all of the bonds so held. The Postal Savings Bank trustees would simply make a loss equal to the cost of doing business if they received deposits and invested them at the same rate of interest. Besides, the government proposes to issue to, or through, the Postal Savings Bank its bonds bearing interest at 2½ per cent with a fixed date of payment, viz.: twenty years after issue. This feature of having a fixed maturity enhances their value in addition to the higher rate of interest they bear over that of the never maturing 2 per cent bonds. The Postal Savings Bank Act authorizes the trustees to invest the ordinary savings deposits of the bank in these $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent bonds. The National Reserve Association therefore would be at a decided disadvantage in disposing of its 2 per cent bonds to the Postal Savings Bank in competition with the proposed new issue.

What then is the solution of the problem? It is proposed that "if the government should adopt the policy of issuing securities at a higher rate of interest than 2 per cent, the National Reserve Association shall have the right to exchange at par the government bonds which it may have acquired from the national banks, previously held by them to secure circulation, for any bonds bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent." The government has already adopted the policy of issuing bonds at 3 per cent without the note issuing privilege attached to them, so to that extent the way is opened for this refunding proposition.

There are several reasons why the government should refund these bonds. A valid reason is that every class and every interest in every section of the country will participate in the benefits of having our national banking system placed on a solid and efficient basis. The plan proposed will accomplish this and refunding the 2 per cent government bonds on an investment basis is an indispensable part of it.

Another good reason for the refunding is that it will cost nothing. It has already been shown that the profits of the National Reserve Association will be large, and 1 per cent more income on its government bonds will just add that much. The government will therefore be practically paying out money for additional interest with one hand and taking it back in the form of additional profits with the other.

Another equitable reason is that while the artificial market for the bonds has existed the government has had the advantage of floating its debt at 2 per cent and the distinction of having its 2 per cent bonds selling at a premium, a rate and a distinction enjoyed by no other national government in the world. It has received as high as 4 per cent premium on the original issue of some of these bonds and it cannot now afford to allow them to fall in price to their actual investment market value, when there is a simple and inexpensive way of preventing it.

As to whether the refunding of the bonds on a 3 per cent basis would establish a permanently steady investment market for them at par is, of course, a matter of opinion. That would depend on the extent to which the government might have to come into the market with new issues. Under ordinary circumstances, by standing ready to purchase them at or about par, the National Reserve Association would doubtless be able to establish a reasonably steady investment market for them at that price or a little better, and to dispose of probably $50,000,000 of them annually to investors. In this way it might become a valuable agency through which the government could float its new issues. The trustees of the postal savings bank would doubtless then also be able to absorb a considerable amount of them annually.

The next problem is how to extend to the state banks and to the trust companies doing a banking business the privilege of membership in the local associations and the benefits that will accrue to banks dealing directly with the National Reserve Association. So far as I know this problem has not yet been solved and I have no idea that the few suggestions I will here make will solve it.

That these state institutions must in some way participate on equal terms with the national banks in all the benefits of the proposed plan seems to me inevitable. Unless they do, the defects in our banking methods, which are as germane to state as they are to national banks, will continue to exist among the great majority of our banking institutions. There is no greater solidarity in the one class than in the other. In times of financial stress state banks participate with the national banks in the struggle for cash reserves.

When the national bank act was passed the federal government prevented the state banks from issuing circulating notes and thereby removed the means they formerly had of protecting their lawful money reserves. Since then they have had to resort to the use of lawful money in their counter transactions. They have had no substitute for it other than national bank notes, which to them are the equivalent of gold, or lawful money, and, unfortunately for the soundness of banking in the country, as a whole, are counted by them as such in their cash reserves. By such erroneous use of the national bank notes credit is extended on the basis of them as reserve money, while they are themselves mere credit instruments—mere promises to pay lawful money.

All the defects of the national system therefore are much in evidence among the state banks and any plan that does not include the great majority of state institutions in its benefits will do less than half the good it otherwise might. To accomplish the beneficial results that are expected from the plan, practically all the banks of any importance, both national and state, should co-operate through it and all qualified to meet the necessary requirements should in some way be brought into it. Unless this is accomplished conflicting interests will continue in the banking business which will seriously interfere with the operations of the plan and greatly detract from its benefits to the public.

It would be ideal to have the banking business of the country all done under one national system. So long as we have forty-six states, however, with the right to enfranchise their own banks, to regulate them under their own jurisdiction and to make their own banking laws, it will not, I fear, be practical to bring the state institutions, or any considerable number of them, into a national system. On June 30, 1910, the last date on which a comparison can be made, we had 7,145 national banks and 15,950 state banking institutions; the former controlled $7,257,000,000 deposits, while the latter controlled $10,321,000,000. These figures disclose the difficulty of the problem and demonstrate the fact that again it is a condition and not a theory with which we have to grapple.

It has been suggested that the national bank act might be liberalized so as to permit the reincorporation of state banking institutions under it with power to carry on, within somewhat more restricted limits, their present classes of business. It does not seem to me that it would be advisable to attempt to so liberalize the national bank act that the state banks would be induced to surrender their state charters and reincorporate under the national law. To arrive at an intelligent conclusion as to the probability of their so reincorporating, one would have to be familiar with the forty-six different banking laws under which they now do business.

Very few of the state laws provide for fixed legal reserves against deposits; some of them make provision for the mutual guaranty of deposits, recent developments in connection with which, however, would indicate that this provision would drive state banks into the national system rather than keep them out of it.

panies are organized under one general banking law, any proposed change in which must be referred to the people, and decided by a majority of the votes cast at an election. As a part of their organization they assume the name "bank" or "trust company" as suits their fancy, and there being no limitation in the banking act on their duration, they determine for themselves the length of their charters. Some of them are chartered for 999 years. They have the right, irrespective of their titles, to do a general banking business, a savings bank business and a trust company business. They may be appointed by the courts receiver, assignee, trustee, guardian, conservator, executor, etc. In Chicago there are fourteen national banks, fifty-three state banks and two foreign banks. The Chicago Clearing House Association has eighteen members of which eleven are state banks, six national banks and one foreign bank, while there are thirty-two state banks, eight national banks and one foreign bank having the privilege of clearing through members.

It would be necessary, it seems to me, for the autonomy and comprehensiveness of the proposed plan that the greater part at least of the state banking institutions should in some way become parties to it. The national bank act might be liberalized so as to enable national banks to compete on more equal terms with the state banks in some of the lines of business from which the former are at present precluded. At the same time specific requirements might be made in connection with the organization of the local association and of the National Reserve Association for the privileges of membership in the former and of shareholding in the latter. These requirements should be such as would assure the standing of state banks, to which these privileges of membership and of shareholding might be extended. Irrespective of the state laws, these requirements might cover the maintenance of a sufficient legal reserve on practically the same basis as that required of the national banks. They might provide a minimum of paid-in capital and for the sending of copies of the state examiners' reports to the executive officers of the National Reserve Association. They might even go so far as to require the submission by the state banks to examination by national bank examiners or by special examiners appointed by the National Reserve Association. In localities where clearing houses have their own examiners the reports made by them could be made available to the National Reserve Association, or the system of special examinations might be so arranged as to have the clearing houses and local associations co-operate in it.

With membership in local associations and the benefits of becoming stockholders in the National Reserve Association protected in some such ways as these, there is no reason, that I can see, why state banking institutions should not be allowed to come into and enjoy all the benefits of the proposed plan without surrendering their state charters. Their individual qualifications and not their charters should be the test of their fitness.

prominent features of Senator Aldrich's plan for monetary legislation. The suggestions I have made are, of course, from my own point of view which I have endeavored to make as broad as possible. Some of these suggestions will undoubtedly appear differently from other points of view. Discussion from every point of view is what is wanted. I know that the National Monetary Commission is looking for suggestions from all classes of the community. Senator Aldrich gave out the plan merely as a suggestion and invited the study and discussion of it for the benefit of the commission from all parts of the country. I hope my study of it may be found of some value in the construction work of the National Monetary Commission.

In conclusion I commend the plan without hesitation. I believe it to be founded on correct principles and to be ingeniously adapted to present banking conditions in this country. If adopted it will correct many defects in our present banking methods and when its details have been satisfactorily worked out, as they doubtless will be, it will be a thoroughly practical plan.

CHAPTER RECORD

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the American Institute of Banking in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Systematic Education and Universal Membership

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF BANKING REPORT

Brandt C. Downey, chairman of the Institute executive council, reported as follows at the Nashville meeting this week on chapter conditions:

It is pleasing to report to you that as the American Institute of Banking section increases in membership and experience its activities become more educational in character in accordance with our declared purpose to educate bankers in banking. More and more in every locality are the junior offices, and the general membership of the chapters turning their attention to an earnest study of the banking business,—its underlying principles, its history, and its practices. The prestige of the standard examinations for certificates has come to mean much, standing as they do for proficiency in banking practice and superiority in banking knowledge.

During the past year fully one quarter of the eleven thousand junior bankers identified with the institute as chapter members or individual students have systematically pursued the study course in "banking and finance." The studies in law are being rewritten by Thos. B. Paton, general counsel of the American Bankers Association, and when completed will be consolidated with the studies in "banking and finance," so that the work may be taken either as one unified course, or divided into two courses, according to circumstances and preferences.

Institute instruction thus provided considers the general subjects of wealth and its production, the distribution and consumption of wealth, exchange and money, money and credit, credit and banking, bank evolution, bank organization, bank administration, bank accounting, cash and reserves, clearing houses, bank examinations, collections and transits, loans and discounts, stocks and bonds, trust companies, savings banks, foreign exchange, the principles of commercial law, business contracts and their essentials, torts and crimes affecting banks, agency and trusteeship, partnerships and corporations, bank officers and agents, requisites of negotiable instruments, indorsement and negotiation of bills and notes, rights and liabilities of parties to bills and notes, discharge of bills and notes and proceedings upon dishonor, acceptance of bills of exchange, the law of bank deposits, checks and certificates of deposit, forged and altered paper, suretyship and guaranty, sales and mortgages, pledges and collateral securities, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, banking insurance, bankruptcy and insolvency, public finance, English diction and discourse.

The institute aims to make its work as nearly uniform in character as circumstances will permit. In suitable cities bank employees are accordance with the class method of instruction.

The same system may be utilized in individual banks and other financial institutions. Outside of classes in chapters and individual institutions the correspondence system of instruction is employed. The correspondence method of study lacks the inspiration of social contact, but the personal relationship established between students and instructors stimulates ambition, and the fact that all lessons must be written insures thoroughness and thought. So far as actual acquirement of knowledge is concerned the advantages of the correspondence method of instruction fully offset its disadvantages.

I want to urge you, as the governing body of the greatest association of financiers in the world, to give as much of your time and attention as your arduous duties will permit to the chapters in your own cities, in their chapter sessions as well as in their activities outside of chapter sessions. I believe you will find organized in chapters for educational work in such attention to the affairs of your employees will be an investment for your banks beyond your most sanguine hopes. There is exceeding loyalty on the part of bank clerks, I find, to their banks and to their officers. Such loyalty, when added to an enthusiastic regard for officers who show self-sacrificing interest in the chapter affairs, will give to your banks a force for good which is a very valuable asset in any business organization.

The correspondence course for bank officers and employees outside of chapter cities is well arranged and instruction is carefully and intelligently given. It seems to me this instruction for men outside of chapter cities will have a far reaching effect in producing a higher average in banking practices, and a closer organization among the members of the American Bankers Association, through these activities of the American Institute of Banking section.

CHICAGO CHAPTER

A spirited but friendly contest is going on for the presidency of Chicago chapter A. I. B. The candidates are Louis Rich of Illinois Trust and Savings Bank; Charles W. Allison of Northern Trust and H. Smale of Continental-Commercial. The nominations are to be made at the meeting of May 9th and the election will take place May 23d.

May 11th is to be ladies' night, on which occasion, in addition to social features, Howard W. Jackson, hospital steward of the U. S. navy, will give an illustrated lecture on the navy. There will also be an election of delegates to the Rochester convention.

NEWS OF PACIFIC NORTHWEST

Spokane, May 3.—Trailed by detectives through two states, Andrew J. Huart, formerly a bookkeeper in the employ of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company and former assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Washtucna, Wash., was arrested near Portland, Ore., charged with forgery. Huart is wanted by the state and federal courts. The crime for which he was arrested charges him with uttering forged checks for $54.35, which he cashed at the Traders National Bank of Spokane on April 3d. Since he disappeared from the city he has been indicted by the federal grand jury for embezzlement of $630 while he was connected with the Washtucna. Huart was preparing to commit suicide by drowning in the Willamette River when taken into custody. He is under bonds of $1,500.

T. E. Alexander, who was declared to be an habitual criminal, was sent to the state prison at Walla Walla, Wash., for life by a jury of twelve in the criminal department of the Spokane county superior court on April 25th. He was convicted on the charge of forgery on three occasions. Alexander is past middle age. His only crime as far as the court records show has been forgery. The first offense was fol-

He was convicted on the second charge in June, 1906, and sentenced to five years in the state penitentiary and fined $500. He was found guilty on the third charge, on February 15, 1911. Alexander was unmoved when the jury answered that the verdict of guilty was a true verdict.

O. V. Allen, state treasurer of Idaho, announced on returning from the East on April 27th that he has placed $1,100,000 worth of state bonds. The money will be used to complete the new state house at Boise. Mr. Allen said also that the state will loan money to ranchers on their lands. The money is loaned to the extent of one-third of the appraised value of the land, the loans running from three to five years at 6 per cent.

HARVESTER COMPANY AFFAIRS

International Harvester Company's gross sales in the fiscal and calendar year of 1910 amounted to $101,166,300, an increase of $14,500,000 over the sales of the previous year, and nearly $30,000,000 in excess of 1908.

Net earnings on common stock, after the deduction of $4,200,000 dividends on preferred amounted to $11,884,819, equal to 14.85 per cent on the $80,000,000 common.

The report refers at length to the development of the profit sharing plan.

The average number of employees was 35,743, the amounts expended during the year for salaries, wages, profit sharing, benefit, and pension funds being $29,279,057. The Employees' Benefit Association paid out for death, accident, and sick benefit, $218,703. The permanent fund from the income of which pensions are paid to old employees now amounts to $761,291.

The company has in operation a plan for compensating its employees for injuries resulting from industrial accidents, based upon the principle that the industry should bear the burden of such accidents.

BUY DENVER FIRST NATIONAL

Hayden, Stone & Company have purchased control of the First National Bank of Denver from the estate of David H. Moffatt.

Des Moines, May 3.—Arthur Reynolds, president of the Des Moines National and treasurer of the American Bankers Association has begun an active campaign for a movement which will result in the nationalization of savings banks and trust companies. Closely akin to the subject, Mr. Reynolds is working on a plan of providing for savings departments in the national institutions.

It has long been Mr. Reynolds' contention that the banking systems of the entire country should be unified. His views on the proper methods of bringing about this result have been discussed at many bank gatherings. Mr. Reynolds has been in Chicago this week attending a meeting of a subcommittee from the American Bankers Association which is considering these and similar questions. From Chicago, Mr. Reynolds goes to Nashville to attend a meeting of the executive council.

Prosecution of Criminals

George Leopold, wanted for forgery at Denison, was arrested at Joliet, Montana, and brought back to Iowa to stand trial. Leopold engaged in the newspaper business at Denison as editor of a German paper. He forged a number of checks on the Crawford County State at Denison and one on the bank at Holstein. Detectives located him in Montana.

Harry Bowman, arrested in Minneapolis and brought to Cummins, Iowa, to stand trial for bank robbery, is said to be one of the famous "Robbers' Alliance," which terrorized numerous communities in Iowa and Illinois some months ago. Bowman had served ten months in the workhouse at Minneapolis and had just been released when he was arrested on the bank robbery charge in Iowa. It is thought that he was associated with Johnny Borden and Jerry McCarthy alias Tom Hatch at the time Borden was shot in Chicago in December, 1909. Following the Borden affair, a woman named Carrie Hammond made a confession in which Bowman was implicated. At that time he escaped the officers and it was under the name of Harry Richardson that he was arrested in Minneapolis ten months ago charged with unlawfully entering a building.

Walker's Serious Condition

George F. Walker, vice-president of the Iowa Loan and Trust Company of Des Moines is still in a serious condition as the result of injuries received in a runaway near Colfax two weeks ago. He was at Mercy hospital two weeks but the past few days has been at his residence. Mr. Walker is quite old but his progress has been good considering the circumstances.

Group Meetings

The meeting of Group Eight at Davenport, May 11th, will have as its main feature, an address by Representative E. R. Moore of Cedar Rapids on "Legislation Passed by the Last General Assembly." Mr. Moore was chairman of the committee on appropriations. He will probably confine his remarks to bank legislation. Three group meetings were held this week. Group Nine met at Osceola, May 2d; Group Six at Des Moines, May 4th; Group Three at Charles City, May 6th. They will be dealt with at length in next week's issue of THE CHICAGO BANKER.

N. V. Kuhl, cashier of the German Savings at Earlring was elected chairman of Group Five at the meeting at Council Bluffs last week. Eugene Sullivan of the Panama Savings at Panama was elected secretary. The executive committee will consist of E. E. Hart of Council Bluffs, chairman; August Beresheim of Council Bluffs; C. E. Price of Council Bluffs; L. F. Potter of Harlan; C. N. Wood of Logan. The attendance was the largest on record for the group.

George M. Hippee Dead

Des Moines lost a pioneer banker in the death of George M. Hippee at his home here of paralysis. Mr. Hippee was a director for the Iowa National Bank and for the Iowa Loan and Trust Company at the time of his death. He came to Des Moines in 1855. It was in 1864 that he organized the Second National of which he was president. This was merged with the First National into the National State. This was in 1870. In 1873 he erected a building at Fourth and Court and established the Valley bank where he was president until it became the Valley National. In 1881 he organized the Des Moines bank along with Simon Casady, P. M. Casady and George B. Hippee his son. Three years later this became the Des Moines Savings, at present run in connection with the Iowa National. He has been identified with financial institutions since.

ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

The Minneapolis Trust Company has increased its annual dividend rate from 5 to 6 per cent. ordering a semiannual dividend on May 1st of 3 per cent. Hovey C. Clarke, leading lumberman, was elected a director in place of the late A. H. Linton, who was a charter member of the company, and the last left on the board.

H. E. Cobb, who retires as president of the Minneapolis chapter, has a check from E. D. Hulbert of Chicago for competition by the Minneapolis clerks on the Aldrich plan of currency. J. C. MacLean, the new president, will appoint a committee to confer with Mr. Hulbert as to judges. Mr. Hulbert's criticism on the Aldrich plan at the time he addressed the Minneapolis clerks at their annual dinner last month was based on inability to understand its practicability. The question for competition will be, "What inducement is there under the Aldrich plan for national banks to carry their reserves with the association, rather than in their own safes?"

Mr. Hulbert, before the American Institute of Banking was formed, had charge of the clerks' organization for the A. B. A. and is known by the clerks in the Twin Cities to have retained an interest in the clerks and their work.

F. A. Chamberlain has returned from California to his desk in the president's office of the Security National. He was away for a rest, he says, and gave no attention to business. Mr. Chamberlain was at New York, Old Point Comfort, Philadelphia and New Orleans on the way West. He said on return: "In San Francisco there are so many new buildings that the city has taken on a new appearance and traces of the earthquake have almost disappeared, at least in the center of the city. So far as I gave attention to noting business conditions the country seemed sound, but quiet."

C. W. Farwell, assistant cashier of the Northwestern National is back after a month of rest.

BIG NASHVILLE MEETING

ary, has been 39 degrees, while the average temperature for the hottest month, July, has been 79 degrees.

One of the notable features of the South's development is the remarkable growth of her cities and towns. Among the foremost of these is Nashville—big, thriving, hustling Nashville. Her growth has kept pace with the marvelous progress of the entire South. She is known in the family of Southern cities as the "Dividend Payer," because unquestioned success has crowned every effort of her business people.

Nashville possesses many great things that no other city in the South can ever hope to have. Already she is the South's great market; she is the manufacturing, jobbing, educational, grain and milling center of the South, and leads in many other lines. To all this is added the excellent transportation facilities (rail and water), favorable freight rates, the most healthful and pleasant climate.

Banking facilities are ample for any growth, and labor troubles are unknown.

Statistics of Nashville's comparative exhibit of growth in ten years is decidedly satisfactory, the increase in assessable property being 103 per cent; increase in jobbing sales, 304 per cent; increase in bank capital and deposits, 108 per cent; increase in bank clearings, 184 per cent; increase in manufacturing plants, 270 per cent; increase in postal receipts, 145 per cent; increase in realty transactions, 165 per cent.

Her population is 110,364, an increase of 36.5 per cent, ranking first in Tennessee and fourth in the entire South in percentage of increase.

The financial interests of Nashville are cared for by sixteen banks and financial institutions, which are numbered among the most substantial and prosperous in the United States, and, is rightly said to be among the best rated cities in the country. The institutions of this city are recognized throughout the entire business world as among the most reliable. The present financial strength of Nashville has been forming for many years of ceaseless endeavor, conducted along progressive, yet conservative and safe lines.

The banks of Nashville have a combined capital and surplus of $6,200,000. The aggregate amount of deposits December 31, 1910, were $21,000,000. The bank clearings for 1910 were $224,219,644, the largest in the history of Nashville. Two new national banks and two new trust companies opened within the year and already show progress.

No one thing can be of more importance to a city than its transportation facilities. Nashville's several systems of railroads, and the Cumberland River, with their immediate connections, give her an easy outlet to all the world. It shows the strong commercial position of Nashville, and how easily all the great trade centers of the Mississippi Valley and the gulf may be reached; and how near, relatively, it is to the great commercial ports of the West Indies and South America, while it is 325 miles nearer the Atlantic than is Chicago.

During the past year the development and expansion of the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Company, whose general offices are located in Nashville, has been very marked. The company has increased its number of subscribers about fourteen thousand; the capital employed in the business is over $25,000,000; the issued stock of the company is $19,980,000, divided into shares of $100 each; there are over eighteen hundred stockholders, and of this number some four hundred are officers and employees of the company; nine of the fifteen directors are prominent business men of Nashville. The present officers have been in charge of the business for over twenty years. The company employs over six thousand people; about one-tenth of this number are citizens of Nashville; its lines and business extends over the states of Kentucky, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, and the southern portion of Illinois and Indiana. The work of placing its wires underground in the congested business or fire district of the city of Nashville has been completed during the year, and the overhead structure has been removed.

Nashville ranks second in the United States in the number of its institutions of learning, but ranks second to none in their character and high standing. Its universities, seminaries, academies, colleges for teachers and business, and schools for vocal and instrumental music are filled with the best corps of professors and teachers to be found in the world.

Ten thousand students from other parts of the state and country attend these schools, but the strong pillar and bulwark of all is her public school system, which is conceded to be among the best in the Union.

Nashville has three great universities, seven seminaries for girls, seven business colleges, three medical colleges, two dental colleges, two law colleges, thirty-nine public schools, eight negro colleges and twenty-four miscellaneous schools. These institutions employ nearly nine hundred instructors and enroll more than 12,000 visiting students. The scholastic population of Nashville is over 45,000.

mous Nashville "Boosters' Club," the city entertained 36 conventions, many of them national in scope.

As a city of homes, Nashville is ideal. It is surrounded by a chain of hills that adds to the beauty of the landscape, and provides full protection against wintry blasts. The climate and educational advantages of a city are a very important consideration. Nashville is most fortunate so far as these are concerned. There are 192 churches and missions. Headquarters of the publishing interests of various churches are located here, and a vast amount of literature is sent out.

Nashville abounds in public, law, railroad, school, and fraternal libraries. It has a number of most attractive and beautiful parks. In the matter of theatres, Nashville is well provided. There are many excellent clubs, the homes of some of which are very handsome and costly. They are all well managed, and are among the many organizations which have helped to make life in Nashville, "the Athens of the South," worth living.

UNANIMOUS FOR ALDRICH PLAN

Nashville, Tenn., May 3.—After the reading of the reports of the trust company and the savings bank sections and that of the currency commission of the American Bankers Association, all of which recommended for indorsement the Aldrich monetary legislation plan, the executive council of the association unanimously approved the plan and adopted a general resolution to that effect.

Ninety per cent of the members of the executive council were present, and, after the resolution had been offered by F. O. Watts of Nashville, president of the association, it was moved to be adopted as read. No one voted "no." The resolution is as follows:

"Resolved, That the executive council of the American Bankers Association heartily approves the plan for monetary legislation suggested by N. W. Aldrich, as modified by the currency commission of the American Bankers Association, and the principle set out in the report of the special committee of the currency commission for extending the benefits of the plan to state banks and trust companies.

"We firmly believe that it is thoroughly practical, fundamentally sound and comprehensive, and that, if enacted into law, it will correct all the principal defects of our present bank and currency system."

This sanction of the Aldrich plan by the executive council was all important to the welfare of the proposed legislation and was the most important matter acted upon so far by the council. At the banquet in New York on May 5th the trust company feature of the Aldrich plan will be taken up and ironed out.

The various sections reported that material progress had been made in their several lines. The clearing house section said that a full plan had been devised and sanctioned for the numbering of every bank in the United States, to be utilized in the transit department. The trust company section and the savings bank section in their reports indorsed the Aldrich plan for monetary reform. The American Institute of Banking section and the state secretary's section also reported.

The committee on express companies and money orders reported a plan to communicate with all bankers regarding an issuance of a new money order.

In his report General Secretary Fred E. Farnsworth alluded to the routine work of the association covering the period since the last council meeting held at Los Angeles. The changes brought about in the protective department were touched upon, the secretary stating that the work was moving along satisfactorily.

It was mentioned that the change in the detective agency was made several months after the end of the fiscal year, 1909, and thereafter the former agency had established a bank protective agency of its own.

NEW ORLEANS GETS 1911 CONVENTION

The council at Nashville decided upon New Orleans for the 1911 convention, the date agreed upon being Nov. 13th, and St. Charles Hotel will be headquarters.

FIRST DAY'S EVENTS AT NASHVILLE

Monday was the first business day of the spring meeting of the council and it was a very busy one. First came the section meetings and the committee conferences, all held during the day in ninth floor rooms of the Hermitage, one of the finest hotels in the country.

The trust company section met at 11 o'clock in the assembly room. Oliver C. Fuller, president of the Wisconsin Trust Company of Milwaukee, is chairman of this committee. The meeting was devoted to a general discussion of the recommendations of the monetary commission. Special attention was paid to the part of the recommendations pertaining to trust companies. Mr. Forgan, who delivered the address at the banquet, was heard by this section.

The savings bank section met at 10 o'clock in Room 902. E. L. Robinson, vice-president of the Eutaw Savings Bank of Baltimore is chairman of this section.

Secretary Fred E. Farnsworth of New York, was in charge of the meeting of the clearing house section, and the question of creating for

The Famous Annual Banquet

To an audience which taxed the large dining room of the Hermitage Hotel to its utmost capacity, James B. Forgan, president of the First National of Chicago addressed the executive council Monday night upon the possibilities of Senator Aldrich's plan for monetary legislation. Able, forceful, masterful, and gifted with the art of clear statement, Mr. Forgan soon commanded and held the deepest attention from his auditors.

The speech occupied more than an hour in its delivery (and will be found in full upon other pages). Mr. Forgan took up every phase of the plans outlined by Senator Aldrich, leaving no detail of that mammoth scheme of a National Banking Reserve Association untouched. He went deeply into every defect of our present banking system, reviewed the remedies suggested by Senator Aldrich, gave a table of statistics of the profits which would accrue from the National Reserve Association and also the difficulties.

C. H. Huttig, the toastmaster, had been the first speaker of the evening, expressing his appreciation of the privilege accorded him in being allowed to speak upon the occasion. Continuing he congratulated the Athens of the South upon its commercial and financial interests.

F. O. Watts Speaks

In closing, the toastmaster introduced Hon. F. O. Watts of Nashville, president of the association, and president of the First National of this city.

Mr. Watts, in the beginning, expressed his pleasure at being called upon and stated that he would not be appearing before the assemblage as a speaker but for the fact that it was the custom for presidents of the association to address the executive council.

According to President Watts, the general body represented 12,000 of the leading banks of the country. It had grown from a membership of 1,500 to 1,876.

Mr. Watts stated that at one time bankers did not realize the importance of compact organization. He stated that they had soon been made aware of the importance of it.

By organization only, in his opinion could financial, economic and commercial questions of the day be solved. He stated that the only difficulty attendant upon the formation of the organization was that some of the bankers were reluctant at first. But he was thankful that they had gone to work and accomplished the great organization of which the present assemblage was representative.

In closing Mr. Watts reminded the festive assemblage of the fact that the present time was May Day. In olden times, he stated, there was but one May queen. Upon this May Day he was happy to look upon seventy-three May queens.

W. M. Livingstone, president of the Dime Savings in Detroit, and vice-president of the association, followed Mr. Watts. Mr. Livingstone proved to be the humorous orator of the occasion, speaking with the ease and grace of a Depew or a Daniel, and making a most enjoyable and poetic after-dinner address.

He began, after having been introduced by Mr. Huttig, with several jocular remarks concerning experiences which he had enjoyed with the toastmaster in New York. He dwelt in romantic manner upon the hospitality of the South, saying that this had been told him by Mr. Watts before ever visiting this city. He extolled the beauty of southern women, their grace and charm, and dwelt upon the courtesy and warm-heartedness which had been exhibited by their several hosts upon their excursion about the city Sunday.

Mr. Livingstone stated that he would ask the council that the convention in 1912 be held in (Continued on page 31)

Wrenne Bank Building

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

Nashville, the educational center of the South, and in location and with wealth of territory contiguous in agricultural, grazing, timber, coal and iron, ample to make it the commanding gateway and commercial distributing point of the South, is supreme to a greater extent in all that makes for the material prosperity of a community than any other Southern city.

The city's advancement while substantial along lines of modern progress, has not been in keeping with the opportunity its location and natural advantages afford its people. Notwithstanding this the growth of the city in its various lines has been substantial.

Among those who have been ever progressive and aggressive in the effort to advance every beneficial interest for Nashville, its section, and the state, and particularly in furnishing large sums of money on long time and at favorable interest rates for use in commercial lines and in building bank and office buildings, business houses and dwellings and also as pioneers in furnishing ample bank facilities where saving funds, trust and like funds, could be and are invested by holders, owners, and depositors of such funds, with absolute safety and on an income basis better than had been offered prior to the advent of this banking house in the business life of Nashville, Thomas W. Wrenne & Company stands first in the community.

Thomas W. Wrenne & Company conducts a general savings bank, investment, surety bonding, building loan, real estate, and ocean steamship agency business.

The handsome, costly and admirably constructed office, bank and general business buildings in the business district of Nashville and the substantial, convenient and attractive dwelling houses in cottage and mansion styles to be found in the city and its suburbs and as well in many of the larger cities of Tennessee and the South, stand as the ever present and best evidence of the financial strength, beneficial and lasting work of this banking house in Nashville, Tennessee and the South.

In commercial lines this banking house represents among its correspondents some of the largest and strongest financial institutions and banks within and without the state of Tennessee. With these facilities Thomas W. Wrenne & Company is in position to arrange loans in large sums and at favorable rates on high class commercial paper and secured by first class collateral security.

This banking house also sells exchange on New York, Chicago, St. Louis and other cities of this country and as well foreign exchange and travelers' checks, and is in position to furnish travelers in this country, abroad and in all parts of the world for every financial convenience for their immediate use wherever they may be, and at the lowest minimum cost furnished by any banking house thus situated offering like advantages.

In this connection, as the agent representing all of the great ocean steamship lines Thomas W. Wrenne & Company at their Nashville office will sell you steamship tickets and make reservations for you in sailings to and from all world ports and at the identical prices which the steamship companies would charge for the tickets and reservations if obtained from them at their offices at the sailing ports. That is to say should you want to sail from any port in America to any port in Europe, Asia or Africa, or Australia or the Philippine Islands or from any port or ports in Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia, the Philippines, or America, to another port or ports in the world, you can purchase your tickets at the banking house of Thomas W. Wrenne & Company at the identical cost which you would pay for like tickets if purchased at the steamship offices located at the sailing points.

It is quite an advantage also to you to buy your tickets and make your reservations for sailings from Thomas W. Wrenne & Company, for in their office you can select the ship of your choice, reservation and berths the most desirable on the ship and at the most favorable rates and at the same time you can select the largest and the fastest ships or ships of less speed and size, yet restful, comfortable and safe. You can also purchase from Thomas W. Wrenne & Company tourists tickets for sailings to and from all world ports and around the world and at the identical prices which you would have to pay at the sailing ports.

In the rental, lease and sale of real estate the advantages offered by Thomas W. Wrenne & Company to owners and tenants are exceptionally good and unexcelled for promptness, care and satisfactory dispatch of business in these lines. As agents for owners of real estate, this banking house pays taxes, makes repairs and gives general attention to the care and maintenance of the properties without extra charge to the owner or owners and also furnishes the owner or owners monthly statements showing the financial condition of the lease, rental or sale account.

Long experience in making loans on real estate and in buying, selling, renting and leasing business houses, office buildings, dwellings and farm properties, enables Thomas W. Wrenne & Company and its efficient real estate department to have and exercise conservative, expert knowledge relative to all real estate business matters.

Thomas W. Wrenne & Company acts as executor and administrator, guardian or trustee and will make your bond in any of these capacities. In the settlement of wills, trusts, and administration of estates, promptly and always to the entire satisfaction of the parties in interest, this house stands first with the best as the records of courts of probate in Nashville and Tennessee show. This is due to the competent qualifications of the officers of the banking house, practically all of whom from long experience having been trained in this line of business.

Thomas W. Wrenne, President of the Banking Company is now and for many years has been Manager of the Southern Loan Department of the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company and in that connection has for the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company, which is one of the strongest and best life insurance companies in America, loaned large sums of money in the larger cities of the South and particularly in Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia.

David P. Wrenne, Cashier of the Bank is not only an experienced practical banker and safe investor of savings, trust and like funds in the mortgage loans and also in the purchase and sale of real estate, but also a recognized authority in the examination of abstracts of title to real estate and in perfecting and approving titles to real estate as security for loans in Nashville and Davidson county and other counties in Tennessee.

Mr. McCormack, assistant cashier, is one of the best known and most efficient and esteemed bank officers in Nashville.

It will be seen from this brief statement of the general business of Thomas W. Wrenne & Company that this banking house is entitled to the high position it holds and

Detroit, and he extended a special invitation to the ladies present to attend.

John Belle Keeble, of Nashville, spoke upon "Nashville and Tennessee." Mr. Keeble stated in beginning that just such gatherings as the general council were harbingers of a new era in commercial and financial advancement. He stated that men over the whole country were grappling with new ideas as those embodied in the speech of Mr. Forgan.

He felt a hesitation in saying anything about Nashville as he feared that his heart would prompt him to say too much. He spoke of the great industries here, and especially the patriotism manifested in the city by the fact that the Industrial League had been able to raise $100,000. He declared that the growth of the city was not magic, but stable and sound.

He further spoke of the possibilities as a farming and stock raising section.

Taking up the subject of the "Athens of the South," he mentioned the great public school system here, the splendid colleges and universities, and also he said that it was the greatest center in the world for negro education. Mr. Keeble, along this line, told his hearers that the people of the South had dealt generously with the negro and were doing everything for his advancement.

In closing he spoke of the traditions of the state and how those sacred traditions had raised the lily from the ashes during the reconstruction period. He spoke of Andrew Jackson's influence over the life of the nation. He informed his friends from the north that Nashville had furnished two Presidents, two secretaries of war and three members of the supreme court. Nor had she been lacking in war, as testified in her readiness in sending out soldiers. In closing he paid a tribute to Judge Lurton and President Watts as testimony of the quality of the men which Nashville produced.

Convention Notes

A. F. Frame, president of the Waukesha, Wis., National, is probably one of the oldest men in point of service, attending the meeting of the executive council. Mr. Frame says that this is his forty-ninth year in the banking business, thirty of which he has been president.

President F. O. Watts arranged a big golf tournament at the Country Club for the golfing members of the executive council, when the players will try for a cup to be offered by Mr. Watts, to be known as the "Kickers' Handicap Cup."

Wm. Livingstone, vice-president of the American Bankers Association, and who will head the organization next year, is remarkable for his resemblance to Andrew Carnegie—and he isn't afraid to wear a straw hat, in May.

George M. Reynolds of Chicago, head of the Continental-Commercial National, the second in the United States, has held every position in the gift of the association. He said he could not go to New York for the banquet there, because he was preparing to let a contract for a $10,000,000 building in Chicago.

J. M. Donald, chairman of the board of directors of the Hanover National of New York, is one of the big financiers attending the meeting of the council.

Lawrence L. Gillespie, vice-president of the Equitable Trust Company of New York, is the prime mover in arranging for the Waldorf-Astoria banquet by the trust company's department May 5th.

Wm. C. Poillon, president of the Mercantile Trust Company of New York, is another big financier who is attending the sessions of the council.

L. W. Gammon of New York, head of the secret service department of the association, is also here.

Among the enthusiastic golfers of the council may be mentioned Messrs. David H. Pierson and Lewis E. Pierson of New York, F. H. Goff of Ohio and Charles C. Barlow of Connecticut. But the most enthusiastic of the enthusiastic golf players is President F. O. Watts.

M. C. Ailes, vice-president of the Riggs National of Washington, D. C., and formerly assistant United States treasurer under the McKinley administration, is also among those present.

L. C. Cogswell, president of the New York National State Bank at Albany, and formerly president of the New York State Bankers Association, is attending the sessions.

Banking Opinion

Edward S. Lacey, chairman of Continental-Commercial advisory committee, has returned from Europe as optimistic as ever regarding the progress of America, but admits that the people of this country still have a few things to learn.

He praises Berlin as being the cleanest, brightest and best governed city in the world. He also was favorably impressed with the way Germany handles its railroads, manufactures and foreign trade.

"The German government is strongly committed to the policy of building up its foreign trade and commerce," said Mr. Lacey and as it owns and controls leading transportation lines it is able by a system of rebating to give advantages to manufacturers who are shipping to foreign countries. That opens avenues for the profitable employment of capital and labor and the whole policy is one that expands and strengthens the empire's industries.

"Farming there is much better than in America. The production of grain and vegetables per acre far exceeds ours. They practice conservation in a way that we should emulate. The nation is producing about as much timber as it consumes—that is, it keeps up the supply by growth. They build more extensively with iron, stone, brick and cement than Americans do, and consequently timber is saved and houses are nearer fireproof. We are badly mistaken when we assume that Europe is not progressive.

"It may surprise many people to know that Italy leads the continent in percentage of development. That country shows the greatest gain of any in all that goes to make up modern civilization.

"Regarding business in the United States, I am satisfied the turn has come and that the season from this on will be normal. The country has been marking time while awaiting political developments. It would be well if congress were adjourned, but we are going ahead anyway. The possibility of the coming supreme court decisions being unfavorable to corporate interests has been discounted. Should the rulings be favorable the rebound in business will be a vigorous one. There is an assurance of large crops, in the aggregate, and that is a guaranty of new life in all kinds of trade."

Florida Bankers

Ocala, Fla., May 12.—A successful convention of Florida Bankers Association was held here on the 10th and 11th. In addition to the expected large attendance of state bankers a number from other states were present. The program included five-minute talks by members besides the set addresses. This is an enjoyable feature.

President Lamar opened the proceedings at 10 o'clock Wednesday. After the speech of welcome and response President Lamar delivered his annual address. The night session concluded the principal business of the occasion.

Thursday morning the members took automobiles to Lake Weir, then motor boats to Eastlake to the Goodwin bungalow, where the session was continued. After discussion of state requirements and currency reform a buffet luncheon was served. The banquet was held in Ocala in the evening, Judge W. S. Bullock acting as toastmaster.

Money Firmer

Chicago banks report a firmer money market, without change in quotations. Demand for funds is larger and more general but particularly from interior bankers. Rates of interest range from 4½ to 5½ per cent, according to size of transaction. The real estate market is moderately active. Bonds are in good demand.

BOARD OF TRADE MEMBERSHIP

A Chicago Board of Trade membership has sold for $2,625 net to the buyer which is the same as the price paid at last sale.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

ILLINOIS BANKERS COMMITTEE on agriculture has found that there are forty-eight counties in the state which the census shows to have retrograded in population during the past ten years. This the committee believes to have been caused by the young men born in the country going to the larger cities to make their future homes. It is quite a large assignment for the committee to change this tendency on the part of young America.

IN the state of Illinois there are more than 10,000 practically one-room schools. More than 300,000 boys and girls attend these small schools and it has been found that 85 per cent of them have no additional educational advantages. The committee is working towards a point where they hope to increase the educational facilities for these children and to in some way direct their attention to the possibilities of farm life. No committee in existence to-day has a larger field or a greater opportunity.

BANKERS all over the state are being urged to request their senators and representatives to promptly pass a bill which will secure better protection for drafts with bills of lading attached. This movement is being fostered by the Illinois Manufacturers Association as well as the Illinois Bankers Association. The railroads, while not urging it, are being quite fairly treated in the matter. Illinois is behind many other states in this and many other questions of uniform legislation.

CHARLES W. KNOOP, cashier of the Black Hawk National at Waterloo, Iowa, has been in the city during the week on business connected with this growing institution.

FRANK D. BRUNDAGE, assistant manager of K. N. & K. Company (New York), is taking time between state meetings to return to his home institution. Next week he will be on his way to attend conventions in Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, and Kansas.

EDITORS of the "Review," a sprightly publication issued by the employees of the First National Bank of this city, wisely decided to print in full that splendid oration made by James B. Forgan before the A. B. A. council at Nashville, touching upon the possibilities of our proposed new monetary legislation. This is one of the ablest documents ever issued on this subject and will be very much in demand during the educational campaign which now is starting on that general subject.

WG. EDENS of this city was the principal speaker at Group Six meeting held at Charleston this week. In matters touching upon Illinois group conditions, Mr. Edens is without a rival.

DETECTIVE WM. J. BURNS, so much in the lime-light recently, is to have another opportunity of distinguishing himself far beyond the common. His services have been engaged to unearth the graft conspirators in and around the Ohio legislative halls at Columbus. This undertaking might fairly be classed with the great Times disaster which for many months was so puzzling to the public. Those who know Burns best are inclined to lay a few wagers that the Ohio grafters will be caught.

STATE secretaries would find their employment much more congenial and much more profitable to the membership if they did not spend so much of their time trying to sell high priced insurance to bankers in some particular company and in trying to saddle upon them some particular brand of "burglar proof." A state secretary should devote his time chiefly to furnishing the membership the brands of those particular commodities which they most desire at the most attractive possible prices.

BANKERS who are desirous of bringing about the passage of the new banking and currency law will find their efforts much better appreciated if they kindly will allow Senator Aldrich to remain in the background. Probably 90 per cent of the small bankers of the country can easily be converted to the new code, but will find it very difficult to change their opinion of the long-time, bogie man of the senate.

EAST WATER STREET in Milwaukee is to be the future financial center of that growing city. Great banking improvements are under way for the First National and the Wisconsin National, and it is thought that the National Exchange Bank has made provision for the future in that locality. The Marshall and Ilsley Bank has landed in a very choice location in that most desirable of localities.

NOT so very far down in the state of Illinois there is a fair sized national bank, the directors of which do not believe in either group meetings or state conventions. The bank has lost four cashiers in ten years to larger institutions. These cashiers successively were about all there was of a live nature connected with the bank. They attended conventions at their own expense and, when opportunity offered, made connections with more liberal institutions. There ought to be a lesson in this for somebody.

UP in the Northwest where a postal bank has been established and where the local banks, by agreement, do not advertise, a startling condition has arisen. The mayor of the city has inserted an advertisement in all the local papers advising the workers of the city to put their savings in the postal bank. Now the other bankers who have been operating under an agreement of silence-and-division-of-profits are up against it. First they were unwise enough to attack the mayor. Upon second thought probably they will conclude to advertise.

WISCONSIN bankers will meet in Milwaukee, July 12th and 13th, for their annual convention. They have been very fortunate in securing a promise from George M. Reynolds of this city to speak upon the new features of the monetary situation. A great many advance reservations have been made.

AMONG the Iowa bankers who always accompany C. B. Mills to Chicago when Frank Gotch has anything on, is G. L. Tremain of Humboldt. Banker Tremain has invested over $250,000 for Gotch in "choice Iowa farm mortgages" (nothing better), and looks for Frank to return from his present trip with about that much more. Thus far he's getting about $1,500 per night.

A. J. FRAME, president of the First National, Waukesha, Wisconsin, landed in Chicago from Nashville in good season to attend the luncheon of the members of the Chicago Wisconsin society held at the LaSalle Hotel in honor of their president, Angus S. Hibbard of the Chicago Telephone Company, who is leaving for New York to become a member of the staff of President Vail. W. R. Dawes, cashier of the Central Trust, who is treasurer of the Wisconsin society this year, a native of Ripon and a trustee of Ripon College, was also on hand, only having returned the day before from the tour of Texas made with the delegation representing the Chicago Association of Commerce. The Wolverine society is one of the big things of Chicago. It embraces in its personnel probably more forceful and influential men in the business and professional world than any other like state organization.

HARRY A. WHEELER, vice-president of the Union Trust Company, has purchased from Hunter W. Finch of the Hunter W. Finch Coal Company the residence of the latter at 5235 Lexington Avenue for $40,000. The house is a modern twelve room stone and brick structure only completed two or three years ago.

THE Guaranty Trust Company of New York has just purchased the Mutual Life Insurance property at the southeast corner of Broadway and Liberty street, and as soon as the present leases expire expects to begin the erection thereon of a modern bank building devoted exclusively to its own business. The site measures 78 feet on Broadway and 135 feet on Liberty, and entrance to the new building will be had from three streets, Broadway, Liberty and Cedar.

THE remarkable growth of the Guaranty during the past few years, and its more recent consolidation with the Morton Trust Company and the Fifth Avenue Trust Company have made necessary much larger offices than are available at its present location on Nassau street. The company's total deposits on the occasion of its latest published statement, February 28th, exceeded $133,000,000, and its total resources are over $170,000,000. Alexander J. Hemphill, president, and Charles H. Sabin, vice-president, are the executive officers, and the board of directors, of which Hon. Levi P. Morton is chairman, includes some of the foremost men in American financial and business circles.

MISSOURI has 1,289 banks of which 1,071 are state, 130 national, 52 trust companies. (Continued on page 31)

Banking Conditions in Louisiana

President Albert Breton's address to the Louisiana Bankers convention at Baton Rouge, May 2, 1911

Besides the very appropriate words expressed by Mr. Sims in his response to the address of welcome of the Hon. Jules Roux, I ask the privilege of adding a few personal remarks to state how proud and happy I feel to-day in having the honor of presiding at the annual convention of the bankers of Louisiana in this most pleasant, progressive and prosperous city of Baton Rouge. The cordial welcome and affable hospitality extended to us and the elaborate program of entertainments prepared by the Baton Rouge bankers have deeply impressed me as it must have impressed all those here present, and I hope that, in performing my pleasant duty as presiding officer of this meeting, my efforts to satisfy all of my fellow bankers will make me worthy of the great honor bestowed upon me at last year's convention.

Let me also tell you how glad I am to see the ladies brightening this audience by their presence. It is well known that, as in almost every spot of our Southland, there are many beautiful and attractive members of the fair sex in Baton Rouge society and as it is hardly possible for every one of us to meet them all during the two days of our convention, I think this an appropriate moment to transmit to all the ladies of Baton Rouge, in the name of all the bankers attending the convention, our sincerest thanks, assuring them of our deep appreciation for the interest they have shown in our annual gathering.

Now, my fellow bankers of Louisiana, allow me to come to our professional questions: I am pleased to say that I have no bad news to bring you in reference to last year's business record; I have no bad bank suspensions or big commercial failures to report; the financial situation in Louisiana is sound, and I firmly believe that we can look forward to a bright and prosperous future. The merchants of all the state, well advised by their bankers, have been very conservative; the farmers have diversified their crops with the most satisfactory results and it may be rather interesting for all of us to know that New Orleans banks this year had the opportunity of buying foreign bills of exchange representing shipments of Louisiana corn exported to Europe.

As a rule, in previous years, we in Louisiana had to buy a great deal of corn from the west, and it is certainly flattering to note that, through the diversification of crops, we have succeeded not only in supplying the large local demand for our plantations and sundry industries, but we have also produced a surplus which has made Louisiana join the list of corn exporting states. Much of our rich lands has been developed and sold in lots to Northern and Western farmers who have become residents of Louisiana. A great impetus has been given to truck farming and from the information I have been able to gather from interested parties, very fair profits have been derived from the shipment of all kinds of fine vegetables and fruit consigned to almost all principal cities of the United States. Cattle raising is also rapidly progressing in our state.

Foreign investors are steadily coming and buying some of our rich timber and mining lands. Let us also call the attention of our visiting bankers to the fact that to-day Louisiana has, in the United States, a monopoly in the production of cane sugar, sulphur, rock salt, and is the only state (with Texas) that produces rice on a large scale. Our sulphur mines are the largest and the richest ever known, and can easily compete with the Italian mines which for a long while were the only producers of the mineral. Our wonderful natural gas fields of North Louisiana have also surprised the world.

In looking on the industrial side of our activities, I may mention that we now have located in New Orleans the largest and most complete sugar refinery in the world and you in Baton Rouge have the advantage also of possessing one of the most important plants of the Standard Oil Co. One of the leading packing houses of Chicago has bought a large tract of land on the shore of the Mississippi river opposite New Orleans with the intention of building a new plant, thus anticipating a large increase in their export business through the Crescent City after the completion of the Panama canal. New railroad lines, and new extensions, are being built, which will largely contribute to the development of the business of our state.

Without my mentioning any further facts of our commercial life, I believe that you will readily understand why, notwithstanding the large losses caused by the appearance of the boll weevil on our cotton lands (the result of which was the reduction of our cotton crop from about 900,000 bales to about 300,000) the financial conditions of our state have remained normal and why our banks have not only been able to finance our local business but many of them had also enough surplus funds to buy, during the dull season, large amounts of commercial paper from firms located in other states of the union.

New Orleans is growing steadily as a financial center and the daily transactions of the New Orleans banks with the U. S. treasury in that city have reached such figures that the treasury department of Washington decided to have the assistant treasurer at New Orleans to become a member of the New Orleans Clearing House Association. Let me also remind those who do not live here that Baton Rouge has been made a port of entry for U. S. custom. Furthermore I understand that this same city of Baton Rouge is becoming such a railroad center that the time is not far when there will be built here a monumental bridge joining both shores of the Mississippi river.

All of the above facts, my fellow bankers, mean steady progress, and progress for our state means prosperity and growth for all of our banking institutions.

Now, if we have to depend to a great extent on the planter, the farmer, the merchant, the manufacturer, the laborer, to build up our local deposits, and also on the banks and firms located in other states to concentrate their business with us, so as to have our large cities become new banking centers, let us not forget that all our customers depend a great deal more on us, to act as their faithful trustees, and that we have to manage our affairs with much more care and prudence than the ordinary merchant or manufacturer, thus having to submit ourselves to certain rules and follow certain policies established for our mutual protection. This is the reason why we bankers have to be the first ones to bring about or uphold any law or logical legislation introduced to give due protection to the interests of our customers, as well as a safe basis as to the rule of conduct in our business.

In this respect the esteemed and able chairman of our legislative committee, Hon. A. T. Merrick, will report to you on the different acts passed by the state legislature at its last year's session which have supplemented and perfected to a large extent the legislation governing banking business in Louisiana. Our executive committee, with your legislative committee, had to make several trips to Baton Rouge to uphold some of the laws and to fight others presented during the last session and it is a pleasure for me to state that the state banking department, the head of which is W. L. Youny, has always shown a willingness to work in harmony with our association. A bill introduced with a view of having on our statutes a general guaranty for bank deposits was reported unfavorably after a hearing given to our executive committee. We had the advantage of putting before the house committee on banking affairs the unsatisfactory results obtained in the states which had tried such a drastic measure as the one which had been introduced in our state legislature.

Have you noticed that people favoring the idea of guaranteeing bank deposits always look at one side of the question, that is to say, they pretend to impose on any good bank its guaranteeing the deposits of any other bank, no matter how the latter is managed and no matter what amount of responsibility it offers to its depositors; on the other hand the same people are willing to permit the organization of a bank by any kind of men and the appointment of any kind of officers or directors without exacting any proof of their ability to conduct a financial institution or any investigation as to their business character and experience previous to their calling themselves bankers.

I was gratified to read in last Sunday's paper that the comptroller of the currency would not authorize any new national bank being organized by promoters.

I have heard a few criticisms concerning the new tax on our state bank examinations; many of our bankers say that, as we annually pay very high taxes, the state administration ought to bear the full cost of running the state banking department. In theory, I agree with this principle, but when it comes to the question of justice and equity in dealing on fiscal questions with any state, we may as well realize that we have a very hard road to travel. I thought heretofore, with many of my colleagues of the executive committee, that the best policy was to provide our state banks, even at a small additional cost, with regular and frequent examinations by our state banking department.

In our profession, we have to contend with public opinion to win the confidence of the people and attract large deposits to our banks, we have to show them our willingness to have our books wide open to thorough examinations and careful investigations to assure the state authorities and the public that we are complying with the laws and taking due care of the moneys entrusted to us.

As long as I have touched on the subject of taxation and as I stated that it was very difficult for us to get an equitable deal, I feel it almost my duty to call once more the attention of this convention to the fact that the banks in this state are the only corporations which are taxed on their holdings of state and city bonds. Why should our banks not be allowed to carry a limited proportion of their capital and surplus in state and city bonds without being assessed on such investments? Would such exemption decrease the revenue of the state? I do not think so; such a measure would encourage our state and our national banks to have a large capital, offering, by so doing, more responsibility to their depositors.

Furthermore, would it not create a ready market and a steady demand for state and city bonds, and consequently, would it not enhance their value and put our state and our cities in a better position to sell their bonds at higher prices?

I thought this question interesting enough to be presented to your attention inasmuch as we are very near the date of the redemption of our $11,000,000 of 4 per cent state bonds.

There is a law which all banks are badly in need of, and that is the uniform bill-of-lading law. You must be aware of the commercial scandal caused by the failure of the two big cotton houses of Knight, Yancey & Co., Decatur, Ala., and Steele, Miller & Co., Corinth, Miss. You also are familiar with the big financial losses sustained by many banks on account of the fraudulent bills-of-lading attached as security to drafts issued by the above firms. The American Bankers Association has been trying very hard to get a uniform bill-of-lading law passed by the congress of the United States but many difficulties still seem to be in the way, and for some reason or other, there always is a delay in the passing of the bill by both houses of congress. The question of the issuance of bills-of-lading by the railroads and the way of determining their genuineness have been discussed very widely for the last year, but nothing has been done yet, and, strange to say, every proposition that has been brought towards the solution of this difficult problem does not seem to have taken into consideration the fact that the banks of the South were the ones the most interested in the question.

A committee of bankers of the American Bankers Association, composed almost exclusively of New York bankers, has been working with a committee of European bankers without any immediate results, and the latest suggestion is a clearing house for bills-of-lading to be located in New York. The idea is a good one as far as New York and European bankers are concerned. In paying the drafts of their interior customers or in buying foreign exchange covered by cotton bills-of-lading which will be certified by the proposed clearing house in their own city, the New York bankers will be perfectly safe; so will be the European bankers in accepting the drafts, but what about the banks located in the other large cities of the U. S., and what about the country banks financing the exchange between the interior point and the port of shipment? They will still have to handle the bills-of-lading at their own risk without any chance of getting them certified unless their customer is in a position to wait between 5 and 10 days to allow the cotton bills-of-lading to be sent to New York for verification.

In fairness to all the banks of this country, I dare say that the proposed New York clearing house for bills-of-lading looks to me, at first sight, as a one sided affair. I am afraid also that such a proposition will put to a great disadvantage very many banks handling foreign exchange and located in other cities than New York. Does it not mean that all foreign cotton drafts will have to be negotiated through a New York banker or a New York broker?

Now, my fellow bankers, I think this question a very important one for all the banks of cotton raising states. I believe that we ought to give it our immediate consideration, and take the matter up at once with the American Bankers Association of which most of us are members, to find out if there is no better way to care for the interests of all concerned.

In terminating this review of the financial points of interest to our state, I also wish to call your special attention to the national currency problem. When you elected me president of your association last year, I stated that I was a strong central bank man and that we ought to follow with the keenest interest the working of the monetary commission appointed by congress. I hasten to state that the monetary commission has performed a wonderful work and that its members have investigated and studied the question without neglecting the least detail, and after reading the plan to create the National Reserve Association of America, I am of the opinion that the problem almost has been solved and that the action of congress is the only final step needed that this great country may have an entirely sound, practical and elastic currency system.

Taking into consideration the ideas of the people of the United States, which are against centralization and direct banking by their government, taking into consideration the local economic and political conditions in each state of the Union, taking into consideration our business methods which are so different from those of the old world—taking into consideration the existence of the present system of national banks which, in many respects, has worked very satisfactorily and of the large amount of national bank notes secured by United States bonds already in circulation, I believe that nothing better can be enacted than a federal law providing for the National Reserve Association of America, established on the basis proposed by the commission. The National Reserve Association will neither be a central bank nor a government bank but simply a national enterprise in which all of the national banks will be interested as shareholders and in which all of them will have a word to say about the management and the way in which the funds and credits will have to be handled, in accordance with the financial conditions and the requirements of each section of the country. In the proposed reserve association, the government will not be a partner; it simply will be a supervisor, to see that the government deposits are safely handled and that the currency is perfectly secured and may be accepted the same as an American gold coin at home or abroad.

Among the new features proposed for the national banking law, the one allowing national banks to accept drafts on themselves drawn at 90 days' sight will put the banking business of this country on the same elastic basis of discount as the markets of Paris, London and Berlin and will enable our importers of foreign goods such as coffee, tea, silk, etc., to finance their purchases abroad without always having to apply to London banks.

Now let me reiterate that we have every reason to feel confident of the future welfare of Louisiana and that if we have lost the Panama Exposition of 1915, we have not lost the South and Central American trade which logically belongs to us and on which we already have a strong hold.

Inasmuch as San Francisco has been chosen by congress as the official city where is to be held the international exposition of 1915, we are broad-minded enough to wish to this new American enterprise all possible success. We hope that the bankers of California, in 1915, will have a record year for their travelers' letters of credit business but let us also hope that all the South and Central American merchants intending to visit the exposition of 1915 will come first to New Orleans, and after transacting their business in our state, take a pleasure trip to the Golden Gate.

I wish now to thank all the banks of the state for their kind and useful co-operation in the workings of the Louisiana Bankers Association.

It is well for me to inform you that we have broken the membership record this year, as we are now over the 200 mark. Out of 230 national and state banks in Louisiana, our association has 201 members, and about 155 of them belong to the American Bankers Association. I do not hesitate to urge those who have not yet joined the American Bankers Association to make their application for membership and to enjoy, besides the many privileges accorded, the full protection against bank thieves, forgers and what are generally known as "yeggmen," which they provide through the Burns' National Detective Association service to every one of their members.

It has been the custom of the Louisiana Bankers Association to afford full protection against such criminals, when appealed to by its members; but the expense on that account is increasing so rapidly that I doubt, unless the dues were very largely increased, that the association will be unable to make further provision of funds for this service. That is the reason why I am led to suggest that all members of this association join the American Bankers Association and secure full and effective protection against robberies. I may add that the metal plate provided by the American Bankers Association to all its members, to be placed conspicuously in each bank, has proven an effective warning to criminals, and while the banks non-members have suffered greatly from thieves, those banks which are members of the national association have reported comparatively few attempts at robbery.

In closing my address I must say that I have never seen better feelings or more harmonious competition and real friendship than those existing now among all the bankers of Louisiana. In their name I beg to express our visiting colleagues, bankers of other states, our sincere appreciation and our real pleasure for their having honored us with their presence at this convention.

Bank Reserves

High grade short time obligations of standard corporations fulfil in a marked degree the requirements of a secondary reserve for banking institutions, possessing as they do the following characteristics:

Freedom from violent fluctuations;
Ready convertibility into cash;
Liberal income return.

We have a selected list of short time securities netting from 4¼ to 6 per cent, which are appropriate investments for banks, bankers, and trust companies. We will be pleased to send a list of these upon application.

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED

Charles G. Dawes

Charles G. Dawes, president of Central Trust Company of Illinois, a former comptroller of the currency, on Friday night of last week addressed Group Six of Iowa Bankers Association at Des Moines, strongly indorsing the Aldrich plan. He said:

"The Aldrich plan for a reserve association is designed to secure to the business interests of the United States the advantages without the disadvantages of the central bank. The reserve association, since it does not accept deposits except from the banks and government and does not pay interest on deposits nor make loans to the business community in competition with the independent banks, may be regarded as the agent of our present great competitive independent banking system through which the latter is enabled to perform certain public services similar to those rendered in Europe through central banks.

"While providing all the powers for good of a central bank, it does not weaken the present competitive system, but serves as a means by which this system can the better serve the business community. The advantage of the reserve association plan over the central bank plan may be stated as follows:

"First—It is a development of the present independent banking system of the United States and not a departure from it.

"Second—The reserve association will tend to maintain the present system of independent banks and to increase its importance instead of lessening it.

"Third—The fact that the stockholders of the reserve association will be the national banks insures of necessity proper supervision and conduct of the branches of the central reserve association.

"Fourth—Because of the distribution of the stock of the reserve association among local banks and the fact that the local banks are represented on the boards of the local associations and the central reserve association and interested in its business the association will not be subject in the same degree to the demagogic attacks which were the great menace to the old central banks and eventually destroyed them, to the great damage of the country through resulting financial panic.

"The reserve association plan will secure to the country the following benefits:

"First—In general it will enable the system of independent banks to exercise collectively, and therefore more effectively, the precautionary measures which each properly managed independent bank endeavors for the protection of its customers and itself to exercise at present, with additional powers for the betterment and facilitation of general business, possible only through united action.

"Second—It will provide an elastic currency, consisting of notes of the central reserve association, which can be secured by the local associations through the rediscount of commercial bills receivable of short maturity.

"Third—It will provide a delegated power with the opportunity to regulate in a general way the expansion and contraction of this currency to accord with the necessities of business and commerce by alteration of the discount rate, and through its sole control of the right to make note issues.

"Fourth—It will provide an opportunity for the reserve association to regulate the general conditions of banking and commercial credits in a helpful way by supplying credits itself and by checking tendencies towards too great a disproportion between banking credits, and to prevent depletion of bank reserves by supplying its own notes when otherwise the reserves would have to be paid out, resulting in a correspondingly larger contraction of commercial credits.

"Fifth—It will have, in these purposes, the assistance of governmental financial relations, and will render the government in its financial administration reciprocal and equivalent service for this assistance.

"Sixth—It will provide an opportunity to protect, practically, by means of its discount rates, the gold holdings of the country from exportation, since, by raising rates of interest, it tends to lessen the incentive for shipment of gold to points where higher rates of interest prevail.

STRINGENT TEST FOR EXAMINERS

Stringent rules which will put the entire banking department of the state of Kansas on a civil service basis, have been adopted by Commissioner Dolley. In the future every bank examiner engaged by the department will have to pass an examination grading 90 per cent on technical banking matters, and all new examiners, department employees and new officers or cashiers of banks under the jurisdiction of the state department, will have to file a statement concerning their qualifications, habits, property, previous employment and other personal matters. Every applicant must, under oath, fill out a blank giving a description of the applicant and the names, addresses and occupations of all relatives; also stating whether he is married or single, how many members there are in his family and how many are dependent upon him, if single. Then follows this list of personal questions:

To what extent do you use intoxicating liquors?

Have you ever been discharged from any position?

Are you in debt? If so how much and for what reason?

Have you ever gambled or played cards for money?

Have you ever 'played the races' or speculated in any way?

Have you any tastes or habits extravagant in proportion to your means?

Have you always lived within your means?
Are you a member of a Young Men's Christian Association?

Are you a member of any church? If so what denomination?

Are you good at figures?

Do you own the house in which you live?

What is a conservative valuation of the same?

Are there any mortgages or other liens on same?

What is its value? Are there any mortgages or other liens on same?

In addition to the above the applicant must tender a list of names of prominent people who know him and to these persons the following questions will be asked:

Are his parents or immediate family people of good standing and owners of property?

Have you knowledge of any debts, liabilities or embarrassments now pressing him?

Is he, or have you ever heard that he was, suspected of drunkenness, gambling, speculation, extravagance, dishonorable conduct, fraud or dishonesty or immoral conduct?

THE CHARLESTON (ILL.) GROUP MEETING

Charleston, Ill., May 10.—Group Six of the Illinois Bankers Association met here to-day. Mayor T. T. Shoemaker welcomed the visitors, who numbered 150, Frederick W. Thompson of the Merchants Loan and Trust Company of Chicago gave a practical talk on broadening the market for farm mortgage loans. Dr. E. E. Taylor of Moline spoke on better farming. The value of group meetings was discussed by W. G. Edens of Chicago, assistant secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois. B. F. Harris of Champaign made a brief talk on the necessity of vocational education. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, G. W. Telling, Danville; vice-president, John M. Glassco, Charleston; secretary-treasurer, G. R. Helm, Tuscola.

MONETARY TENDENCIES

Our European credits will shortly be considerably reduced if monetary tendencies continue in the direction of the last week. Discounts in London and in Paris are now on a 2½ per cent basis, or less than can be obtained for money here. Already there has been moderate drawing of exchange against bonds and notes placed abroad, but the holdings of Europeans have recently been augmented by the purchase of New York City revenue warrants and other securities. The largest banking houses, however, have been able to place most of their offerings at home. The bond market is declared by competent authorities to have improved a little during May.

The Savings Trust Company of St. Louis, one of the outlying financial institutions, re-elected a third of its directors at its annual stockholders' meeting this week. These will serve for three years. The re-elected members are: Frank B. Sliger, R. S. Fleming, Simon Seelig, J. W. Taylor and A. W. Alexander. There was no change in the personnel of the officers of the company.

EDITOR'S ENCOURAGING VIEWS

S. B. Zane, financial editor of the New York Evening Post, said in Minneapolis:

"The financial outlook through the country at large is excellent, and in the Northwest it could not well be improved upon.

"Financial conditions are too delicate to trifle with, and just now with a good deal of uncertainty existing it would be unfortunate if people were caused to take a wrong view of the future. Among bankers and financial men there is no uncertainty, but with the general public some take a gloomy view and are influencing too many others to see things through the same colored glasses.

"The East is in a waiting attitude. Its financial condition is good, but that condition is not being taken advantage of for the very good reason that financial men and other business men and manufacturers are waiting to see what the United States supreme court will do in the trust cases.

"The Northwest here is in splendid shape, I find. It is attracting the attention and causing the wonder of the East by the remarkable progress it has made and is making right along. In the general prosperity which is surely coming soon the Northwest will occupy a leading position.

"I come here often enough to see what Minneapolis is doing. No town or country can stand still—it either advances or goes back. Minneapolis has never ceased going ahead and will not for many, many years to come. I regard it as the best city in the Northwest beyond doubt. In the entire country, outside of cities in the million population class, I look upon Minneapolis as the most progressive by 10 to 1. That is no exaggeration. I am not saying this because I am visiting here but because I mean it, and that is what I tell people in every city I visit."

SURPLUS IS INCREASED

Directors of the Harris Trust and Savings Bank have voted to transfer $250,000 from the undivided profits account to the surplus account, increasing the latter from $1,250,000 to $1,500,000. The bank's capital is $1,250,000. At the last bank call the undivided profits totaled $386,301. There were also several changes in the officials, Frank R. Elliott, formerly cashier, being elected treasurer, succeeding Howard W. Fenton. Mr. Fenton, who has occupied that position and the vice-presidency for several months, will continue as vice-president. Mr. Elliott is succeeded by John S. Broeksmit, formerly cashier of the Merchants National Bank of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Harry E. Weese, formerly auditor, was elected assistant cashier.

NEWS LETTER

By Mortimer I. Stevens

WISCONSIN

Aside from what may be termed a general falling off in most lines of business throughout the entire country and which has affected Wisconsin to some extent, the business condition may be termed as fair. In Milwaukee, merchants are feeling the influence of the weather conditions, and enjoying a good trade in spring and summer lines. The manufacturers claim that there is every indication of a good fall trade in the majority of lines. Milwaukee iron and steel industries report sufficient orders on hand to keep running full time for several months and a revival of trade is anticipated before that time.

The bond situation out-in-state is about normal while in Milwaukee most of the houses dealing in high grade securities claim that they have enjoyed a splendid sale of this class of bonds during the past few weeks. This is evidenced by some unusually heavy purchases made by the Wisconsin Trust Company during the past two weeks and a demand for certain classes of securities which has made it difficult for the officers of that institution to meet the demand.

Planning Trip to New Orleans

Milwaukee bankers are planning to charter a special car to go to the convention of the American Bankers Association in New Orleans on November 13th, following the precedent established at the Los Angeles convention last October. Secretary George D. Bartlett of the Wisconsin Bankers Association states that unless more applications are received than have come to hand up to date the proposed tour of the Milwaukee bankers and their families through Yellowstone Park this summer will be abandoned. While a number of inquiries concerning this trip have been made, yet thus far it has not assumed such definite form as to assure its ultimate success. However, there is some time yet to elapse before the state convention and if enough tourists are secured, one or two special cars will be chartered and the trip will be made. It is intended to have the tour immediately following the bankers convention to be held in Milwaukee July 12th and 13th.

Contract Let for New Bank

The contract for building the new bank for Marshall and Ilsley which is to be erected on East Water Street has been awarded to Paul Riensen's Sons, and the work of razing the old buildings on this site was commenced last week. The new building, the first of the "Bankers Row" will be four stories high with large pillars facing not only on East Water Street but in the rear facing the river as well. Two entrances are provided for; one on East Water Street and the other on a proposed walk on the river front. While no figures have as yet been made public, it is stated that the new building will cost upwards of $250,000.00.

Successful Meeting at Madison

Group Two, of the Wisconsin Bankers Association, held a most successful meeting at Madison, Thursday, May 11th. The attendance was far beyond expectations and the program proved to be of unusual merit. Milwaukee, as usual, sent a large delegation of bankers while the attendance from other points in the state showed the widespread interest in these annual meetings.

As outlined in last week's issue of THE CHICAGO BANKER a number of important subjects were touched upon by the speakers such as "Taxation of Bank Stock of our Group," by M. J. Berg, cashier of the Hazel Green State Bank, Hazel Green; and the "Oklahoma Guaranty Law," by Platt Whitman, president of the Highland State Bank.

Fuller Returns from the East

Oliver C. Fuller, president of Wisconsin Trust Company, has returned from a trip to the East, during which time he took in the meeting of the executive council of the American Bankers Association at Nashville. In New York Mr. Fuller presided at the first annual banquet of the Trust Company section of the American Bankers Association which was held in the grand ball room of the Waldorf-Astoria and was attended by over 600 guests.

Pay us four per cent., because it
Wants us all to go to saving,
So, when old, we'll not be slaving.

Now, a new leaf I am turning,
For a Bank account I'm yearning,
On an income of two-fifty,
I can save if I am thrifty.

Luxuries must be discarded,
Which have only health retarded.
Clothes be worn a little longer,
Buy the quality that's stronger.

Patches only make them warmer,
Neatly done, each patch a charmer.
Wait awhile when styles are newest,
Better case of clothes the fewest.

From leftovers, once rejected,
Dainty dishes now respected.

Paying cash I'm no one's debtor.
Pennies I was wont to squander,
Put away in that box yonder,
Soon shall make another dollar,

Greenwood, Miss., May 12.—The 23d annual session of Mississippi Bankers Association brought out a splendid attendance and a great program was enjoyed.

Prominence was given to discussions of the Aldrich plan, to needed state legislation, relationship of the banker to the farmer and to social features. Interest was added to the occasion by the presence of President Watts, whose work and addresses are arousing keen interest in association affairs.

Mayor G. L. Ray of Greenwood made the formal address of welcome, to which Hon. C. H. Williams, president of Bank of Yazoo City, made response. Wednesday's program was heavily crowded but as most of the addresses and reports were brief the work accomplished made a good showing. The principal speeches came in the afternoon, these being the program features:

St. Louis, May 10.—The elevation of George W. Galbreath, cashier, and Richard S. Hawes, assistant cashier, of Third National, to vice-presidents, and the election of John R. Cooke, assistant cashier, to the office of cashier, was in line with the policy of promotion which has always prevailed in that institution since Charles H. Huttig became its president. In this instance the promotions were in recognition of long and faithful service. There is no bank in the West where more esprit de corps exists than in Third National, and this is due largely to the merit system of promotion in practice there. If an office or position is to be filled outsiders are not sought, but one of the bank's own men is given the place. If he makes good he is maintained permanently, otherwise some other employee is given a trial. This rule extends from the lowest to highest offices, and has proved an incentive which has resulted in the stockholders of Third National being as well served as any institution of the kind in the country. The wonderful growth of this bank is attributable in a large measure to this system.

Had Served Long with Bank

Long service records are to the credit of the men promoted. Before entering the Third National, George W. Galbreath made a reputation as a national bank examiner, which position he held four years. Before accepting service with the comptroller of the currency he had been engaged in financial and mercantile business in Sedalia, Mo. Mr. Galbreath was made cashier of Third National in 1896, and for fifteen years has been Mr. Huttig's chief adviser and assistant. He ranks among the keenest and ablest financiers of the Middle West. "Dick" Hawes entered the Chemical National as messenger boy and pass book clerk in 1892, and went to Third National in 1897, when the former institution was merged with the Third National. He was promoted to assistant cashier in January, 1906, and now rises to vice-president. Mr. Hawes has taken an active part in the affairs of the Missouri Bankers Association, and represents his bank at bankers conventions in all sections of the country. Mr. Cooke has been with Third National for thirty-eight years, and has filled every position from messenger boy to cashier. Mr. Cooke's brother, D'Arcy Paul Cooke, the ranking assistant cashier, has served with Third National almost as long, and both are among the most popular financiers in St. Louis.

To Welcome Benjamin Bush

St. Louis financiers and business men generally have planned an elaborate banquet and reception to formally welcome Benjamin F.

Bush, the new president of the Missouri Pacific Railway. The entertainment will be given at the Southern Hotel on May 19th under the auspices of the Business Men's League. Incidentally the plan is to launch the most vigorous civic pride campaign ever known in St. Louis. E. C. Simmons, who instituted the business sunshine movement, which, in 1908 had so much to do with restoring confidence throughout the United States, will be one of the speakers. Former Governor David R. Francis, vice-president of the Merchants-Laclede National, is chairman of the entertainment committee. Much interest is centered in the advent of this railroad president. A complete renovation of the Missouri-Pacific system is understood to be part of plan under which he was elected, and this vast construction feat will be largely financed and engineered from St. Louis. The Missouri-Pacific being the most typically St. Louis railroad, anything for its betterment can not but redound to the welfare of the city.

State Banks Want Recognition

The Missouri Bankers Association, or at least a goodly part of the membership, will insist that some provision be included in the Aldrich currency bill for admitting state financial institutions to the benefits of the proposed national reserve association. This assertion was made by A. O. Wilson, vice-president of the State National, and other St. Louis financiers are in accord with him. Among the foremost of these is Breckinridge Jones, vice-president of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company. Mr. Jones has been a strong advocate of such a provision, and says he has received assurances that the state banks and trust companies will not be left out in the cold. He attended the big trust company dinner in New York, and returned to St. Louis much encouraged. He said the trust company interests were well pleased with the promises of members of the American Bankers Association and the national monetary commission. Mr. Jones was probably the first American financier to raise his voice in the contention that state institutions should be recognized in the plans for currency reform, and that they should be situated to enjoy in equal measure with the national banks, the advantages of the national reserve association.

Mr. Jones Hopeful

"At Nashville, Tenn., and on my way from that city to New York," said Mr. Jones, "I conferred with members of the executive council of the American Bankers Association and with members of its various sections. Mr. Huttig, of this city, is chairman of the bankers executive council and Festus Wade, also of St. Louis, was chairman of the subcommittee of the monetary commission of the American Bankers Association, which made the report recommending that trust companies and state banks be members of the proposed Reserve Association of America, along with the nationals. The executive committee, composed of over eighty members, passed a resolution unanimously approving the principle. This is of especial interest to the state of Missouri, because of the 1,207 incorporated banks and trust companies of the state, only 130 are national banks. It is gratifying that right here in St. Louis, at a meeting of our Bankers Club, attention was first called to the omission of state banks and trust companies from participation in the plan, and it is pleasant to have the criticism made at that meeting justified, and to know the state institutions will be included. This, in my opinion, will largely allay any fear of centralization of the money power in the government and bring to the support of the plan the financial, industrial and commercial interest of the country."

Bank Examiner Appointed

Considerable interest was aroused in local national bank circles by the announcement from Washington that Gustave A. Miller, cashier of the Southern Illinois National of East St. Louis, will be appointed a national bank examiner and that he will be assigned to the field which embraces Missouri outside of St. Louis and Kansas City. The selection was made personally by Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh, on recommendation of Representative Rosenberg of East St. Louis. As examiner in Missouri Mr. Miller will succeed Examiner Watson of Kahoka, who has been given the post of examiner in Kansas City, where he will fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of P. H. Walton, recently elected cashier of the New England National of Kansas City.

REPLY TO CONTINENTAL AND COMMERCIAL BOOKLET

William W. Clay, of this city, has sent to THE CHICAGO BANKER a criticism on the Aldrich currency plan as interpreted in a booklet sent out by the Continental and Commercial National of this city. Mr. Clay says:

Senator Aldrich of the National Monetary Commission has announced a plan which is likely to become the basis of the commission's report to congress.

This plan is espoused in banking circles generally, and a campaign of education is being instituted to tell the people all about it.

Now there are many details of the bill which these educators should be called upon to explain, but there is one fundamental error in this latest plan for monetary reform, which will be fatal to the interests of the people. I will give it to you, and perhaps you will ask the educators about it.

The kind of money or currency proposed is similar to the present national bank note, and it is to be created and loaned into circulation for interest. The fundamental error, or impracticability of it is, that it has a greater debt-making than debt-paying quality. That is, if the bankers create and loan into circulation a thousand dollars of this currency for one year at 5 per cent, that money (or currency) has a debt-making quality of one thousand and fifty dollars in money, but a debt-paying quality of only one thousand dollars in money back to the lender; for the lender demands that he shall be paid in money.

Do you get this important, but simple fact? If not, read it over until it is perfectly clear and then try to find where the other fifty dollars, in money, is to come from.

This conception of the senator differs from the present system in detail only, and not in principle. Through the present system, the people are already staggering under a public, corporate and private debt of not less than fifty billions of dollars, which figures up to an additional debt-making quality of two billions five hundred millions of dollars per year, at 5 per cent, but a trifle more or less, as the average rate of interest varies.

Now there is nothing whatever in the Aldrich proposition that even pretends to alleviate the past or which promises anything better in the future for the debtor class. Look it over and you will find no provision whatever, except to make it easier to get into debt without the slightest suggestion as to how to get out of it, which I presume it regarded as the debtor's business.—And it is the debtor's business.

For what the people and the debtor class need, must have and may have whenever they demand it, is a dollar that will at least pay the debt it creates when it goes into circulation, and which will have a tendency to decrease, rather than increase the present debt. No dollar which is created and loaned into circulation for interest (as the national bank note now is, and the new currency will be according to the Aldrich plan) is capable of paying the debt it creates or of paying existing debt, except by substituting new debt to take its place.

The proposition as it stands to-day and which we are asked to perpetuate on even more burdensome lines, is a proposition of impossible fulfillment, as attested by financial failures every day, and, periodically, by general business collapses and industrial depressions. For these conditions are brought about only through inability to pay monetary debt. But we need not have it that way, and we should take steps not to have it that way; at least, not to have so much of it that way.

CENTRAL WEST LETTER

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

Omaha

Kansas City is ready to entertain the bankers of Kansas and Missouri who will attend the two state convention here May 24th and 25th. The general committee appointed by President Downing of the New England National Bank, has gone over the situation with the special committees and every detail has been attended to. It is believed that fully 3,000 bankers and many other visitors will be in attendance upon the two conventions.

The Kansas bankers will meet Wednesday morning in the Masonic temple, Kansas City, Kan., while the Missouri bankers will assemble at the same time in the Willis Wood theater in Kansas City, Mo. The afternoon of the first day of the session has been left open for entertainment. The ladies accompanying their husbands will be taken in hand by the wives of the Kansas City bankers. They will be taken for automobile drives over the boulevards and entertained at luncheons at the Country Club and in private homes. At 1 o'clock of Wednesday the Kansas City Banker's club will give a luncheon at the Hotel Baltimore for the delegates, after which there is to be a ball game. Wednesday night all the delegates from both states will meet in Convention hall to be addressed by Franklin MacVeagh, secretary of the treasury, former Governor David R. Francis, F. O. Watts and others. On Thursday both morning and afternoon will be devoted to the business of the two conventions and Thursday evening there will be a smoker.

New National Bank

Kansas City is to have another national bank which will be known as the Commonwealth National. It is announced that the new institution will begin business June 1st, although the location has not been decided upon. G. M. Smith, former president of the National Reserve and Central National banks, was active in organizing the Commonwealth National and will be its president, while his brother, L. C. Smith, will be cashier. The bank will have a paid up capital of $250,000 and a surplus of $50,000. J. E. Hutt will be vice-president and E. J. Short will be assistant cashier. The directors will be Governor H. S. Hadley, J. E. Hutt, A. Monroe, Lawrence, Kan.; W. L. Lacy, W. H. Avery, J. C. Swift, George E. Ricker, G. M. Smith, Charles Hoefer, Higginsville, Mo., and W. F. Waller.

Resist Guaranty Payment

About fifty state bankers of Oklahoma have decided to resist payment of the 1 per cent emergency assessment levied by the state banking department to rehabilitate the bank guaranty fund. The report made by the accountants employed by the Oklahoma State Bankers Association to investigate the condition of the guaranty fund, disclosed the fact that under the Haskell administration the banking board used guaranty funds to guarantee paper and assets of banks that were not declared to be insolvent. The bankers now refusing to pay their emergency assessment insist that the fund be not used in this manner, and can be used only for the benefit of depositors of insolvent banks. The state bank commissioner is demanding that the 1 per cent be paid and says that suits will be instituted to collect it. The resisting bankers express confidence that their position will be sustained in the courts and are inviting the suits.

Southwestern Notes

Dr. John T. M. Johnston, former chairman of the board of the National Reserve Bank of Kansas City, has been elected to its presidency to take the place left vacant by the resignation of G. M. Smith. Mr. Smith has organized the Commonwealth National. The directors of the National Reserve also elected three additional vice-presidents from the membership of the board. They are: John C. Knorpp, W. E. Halsell and F. G. Robinson.

J. Z. Miller, Jr., vice-president of the Commerce Trust Company of Kansas City, has returned from a business trip to the Northwest. He said he found conditions prosperous and the financial people of that territory feeling confident of an era of good times.

The comptroller of the currency has approved the application of the following persons to organize the First National Bank of Belden, Neb.: Charles G. Jordan, G. G. Westrope, John Beuck, James Rabman and F. A. McCormick. The capital of the bank will be $25,000.

years ago, the case will be dropped. When the bank failed Hornaday was very prominent politically and it was thought that the first failure to indict him might have been due to political influence. The government therefore recently brought a special prosecutor from Iowa but without avail. The only charge against Hornaday is that he accepted deposits when the bank was in a failing condition.

The Merchants Trust & Savings Bank is the name of a new financial institution recently organized in Dallas, Texas. It has a capital of $50,000 and will do a general banking and trust business. The officers are: Thomas Love, former state bank commissioner of Texas, president; George W. Blakeney, vice-president; W. C. Evans, former state bank commissioner, cashier; Joseph S. Myers, former state labor commissioner, assistant cashier. The officers with William Bartee, A. Patton and H. L. Smyer will constitute the directorate.

The trial of Henry Hoerr and Neil Mulcahy, accused of belonging to the gang of bank robbers doing business in Kansas during the past winter, has begun at Maryville, Kan. The Kansas State Bankers' Association, represented by Russell A. Algire of Kansas City and J. N. Dolley, state bank commissioner of Kansas are active in the prosecution. The specific charge against the men is that they took part in the robbing of the bank at Beattie, Kan., November 8, 1910. Hoerr was arrested at Wymore, Neb., and Mulcahy in Kansas City several months ago. Other arrests have been made in connection with this robbery. Dan Carney was taken at Portland, Ore., and Frank Wheeler is out on bond.

Tom Jordan, "bad man" and cattle rustler, rode into Keystone, Okla., May 8th and with a shot gun attempted to rob the Keystone State Bank. When Jordan emerged from the bank he was shot by a citizen.

Mortimer R. Platt, 75 years old and a pioneer of the Central West, died at his home in Kansas City last week. He established the first bank at the Kansas City stock yards and was its president for several years.

The directors of the Union Stock Yards Company of South Omaha have voted to issue $5,000,000 in bonds to be floated during the next twenty years as needed for improvements. Of this amount $700,000 will be floated at once, $400,000 of which is to be used to take up floating indebtedness and the balance of 300,000 to be expended for installing a waterworks system and making physical improvements at the yards. R. J. Dunham of Chicago, president of the stock yards company, attending the meeting and authorized the bonds.

ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

Returning from a trip by special train to a Northwestern development league meeting at Helena, bankers of St. Paul and Minneapolis express themselves optimistically. J. A. Latta, vice-president of the Northwestern National, said: "There is a much larger grain acreage in Montana and North Dakota and the crop outlook is much better than last year. Some parts of Montana got very poor crops last season. This year they have the crops in and started under conditions promising very favorably."

H. A. Willoughby, cashier of the First National, Minneapolis, said: "I have been going into Montana every year for three years and I never saw it look better at a corresponding time. Bankers are pleased over the outlook, for with just a fair amount of rainfall from now on the state will make a good crop. The improvement that has been made through Montana generally in the past three years is most remarkable."

W. A. Durst, secretary of the Minnesota Loan & Trust Company, says of the Minnesota bill making it possible for investors in Minnesota to put money into 4 per cent bonds of Minneapolis without being subject to the tax of 31 mills: "The action of the legislature giving tax exemption to municipal bonds in Minnesota will operate eventually to strengthen the position of Minneapolis as an investment city. It was a move in line with changing conditions."

R. W. Webb of the Minneapolis Trust Company, said: "With a $1,000 bond bringing an income of $40 a year and the assessment valuation of $500 placed on it, the tax rate applied makes a tax equal to $15 and brings the net return to $25. Naturally the new law will help the sale of bonds locally."

J. A. Latta, vice-president of the Northwestern National; W. F. McLane, cashier of the Hennepin County Savings Bank, and Professor R. H. Hess of the economics department of the University of Minnesota are the judges to pass upon the papers written by Minneapolis bank clerks, for the Hulbert prize, on the Aldrich bill. Papers are to be in August 1st and are not to exceed 2,000 words.

N. F. Halwey, secretary-treasurer of the Farmers' & Mechanics' Savings Bank, believes that talk about troubles doesn't help them. He says: "If people didn't talk so much about the times being dull, we'd think they were the most prosperous we ever had. Investments are paying as well as ever they did, and business men say they have found things in good shape all over the country. In fact, a traveling man, whose territory covers a great part of the Northwest told me the other day that he had three times as many orders in Minneapolis during March of the present year as he had in 1910. And we hear similar accounts from different parts of the country."

Fifteen years moribund, the St. Paul Stock Exchange has revived with vigor. It opened in the directors' room of the Security Trust Company in the Capital National building. The following officers were elected: A. M. Peabody, chairman; Edwin White, vice-chairman; E. C. Kibbee, secretary and treasurer. These with R. H. Merriam and W. S. Grubbs, constitute the directors. The membership price was fixed at $100. Following is a list of charter members: A. M. Peabody, W. S. Grubbs, E. C. Kibbee, R. H. Merriam, L. H. Ickler, Edwin White, C. O. Kalman, George Newell, L. C. Murdock, F. E. Ford, E. P. James, Ira C. Oehler, Harry W. Parker, F. A. Nienhauser, J. L. Mitchell and M. W. Matteson.

After sixteen years service W. H. Hamilton has retired as manager of the safety deposit vaults department of the German American Bank, St. Paul. He will leave June 1st.

Editorial Comment

GOVERNOR WILSON'S PLATFORM

Governor Woodrow Wilson, in the English fashion, went all the way to Denver to make public his own political platform, defining his own ideas of attainable and desirable popular reform. The address was at a banquet of the Denver Chamber of Commerce and the hit was instantaneous and emphatic. The governor has a facility for stating things in a convincing and understandable way. Bankers never have forgotten his address on "The Banker and the Public," at the big A. B. A. convention at Denver. He told them some pretty plain truths but they liked it and cheered the speaker.

It is expected that Governor Wilson will address the Illinois bankers convention at Springfield in October and the crowd will be the greatest in the twenty-one years of the association's history. On the day prior to the convention a banker-farmers' congress is to be held and they will want to hear the Princeton sage. The owners of half a million acres of Illinois farming land, and of all the Illinois banks constitutes a force for molding public opinion that the big New Jersey governor's advisers will be prompt to recognize.

Here's the Wilson platform:

"In the first place, we mean to open up all the processes of our politics. We find that they have been too secret, too complicated, too roundabout; that they have consisted too much of private conferences and secret understandings.

"We have determined, in the second place, to give society command of its own economic life again by denying to those who conduct the great modern operations of business the privacy and independence that used to belong properly enough to men who used only their own capital and their individual energy in business.

"In the third place, we have determined to safeguard our national resources at every point, realizing, as we do, that we have been too lavish of them and have used them in spend-thrift fashion.

"In the fourth place, we have made up our minds to cut all privilege and patronage out of our fiscal legislation, particularly out of that part of it which affects the tariff.

"In brief, we mean by every progressive measure suggested in such a catalogue of purpose to throw open the gates of opportunity to mankind."

When you think it all over, again and again, doesn't it make a hit with you? Makes the vote catching platitudes of the political-statesman seem quite cheap and tawdry. Don't be the very last in your community to hail a leader of men.

IMPROVING BANKING METHODS

Bankers, owing to the perfection of their methods and to their well established religion of conservatism, often are the very last to recognize the possibilities of improving conditions. Banking institutions seldom are the first to adopt new business systems and this accounts in large part for the years of delay in coming to the single gold standard; to the necessity for uniform bills of lading; to the advantages of organizing into groups and state associations, and the backwardness in taking their true position of influence in shaping and controlling the new legislation of the country. To this position "to let well enough alone," may be attributed the long and continuous struggle which has been necessary to bring about reform and up-to-date banking laws in the states and in the nation. Are not bankers to blame for the fact that the United States government for a hundred years has demanded cash payments for revenue stamps, import duties and postal transactions? While bankers were busy teaching the public the use of checks and letters of credit, they have been carting their daily clearing house balances through the streets in ancient wagons—a strictly primitive method.

But all of these things are to be remedied finally. The Chicago Clearing House is one of the most active institutions of its kind in America. It boldly adopted the clearing house examination system and that new doctrine has spread through nearly all of the other cities. At present this same, standard organization is digging deep into the earth under the Central Trust Company building to make vaults in which millions of gold may be stored and upon which drafts will be drawn for the settlement of clearing house balances. The ancient currency wagons with their iron grills and armed policemen will be seen no more. This is modern and should have been brought about many years ago.

The New York Clearing House, after many years of scandalous banking collapses has decided to recognize the trust companies and to adopt supervisory methods found so effective in Chicago. New York trust companies are to keep reserves which will be no hardship on the stronger ones and which will strengthen or eliminate the weaker ones. This will go far towards inducing honest and safe banking in that great center. Bank promoters and originators of chains of banks will give them a wide berth.

In addition to all these new things, certified checks will, after June 1st, be accepted by the government at New York and elsewhere for duties on imports. These certified checks must, according to the law, be collectible through the clearing house and this will operate in New York and elsewhere to bring all important institutions into the clearing house organizations. The wonder is, and will continue, that all of these things have not been done years ago.

Mississippi Bankers' Convention President B. W. Griffith of Vicksburg reviews banking conditions in the state and discusses guaranty and other questions

At each recurring convention of this association I have listened with interest and profit to the president's address, but now that my turn has come to present one it seems there is nothing to say which will either interest or instruct. For once I am sure that the wiser course would be to omit this part of the program and devote the time to other papers and discussion. However it is well perhaps to keep up the custom, else we might miss some excellent things succeeding presidents may have to offer.

During the past year the banking business has shown substantial growth. A comparison of statement furnished by our very careful and efficient state auditor, Hon. E. J. Smith, for the 11th of November, 1910, shows for 1909, investments, $74,729,000.00; cash and exchange, $18,912,000.00; deposits, $58,111,000.00. For 1910, investment, $79,555,000.00; cash and exchange, $22,348,000.00; deposits $67,957,000.00.

The last obtainable data (those of Feb. 1, 1911) show further growth, and place investments at $74,749,000.00; cash and exchange $31,787,000.00; deposits, $79,268,000.00.

These figures may be used by the expert manipulator to prove what you will. To me they indicate increased business in our state, agriculturally, industrially and commercially. They also indicate that this business activity has been productive of a material increase in the developed resources and available wealth of our state. They also show the unwavering confidence our people have in our financial institutions.

It will be recalled that when we last met the Knight, Yancy & Company, and Steele Miller and Company failures had but recently occurred and their forgeries of cotton bills of lading become known. It will be remembered that this association passed resolutions of strong censure on the guilty parties and deepest sympathy for the victims both at home and abroad. Very soon thereafter a New York paper published an editorial containing the severest strictures on the southern people for their failure to punish these criminals and criminals generally, and bringing a sweeping indictment against the honor and integrity of the entire South, John M. Clark, cashier of the Bank of Tupelo, called my attention to the editorial, and suggested that I, as president of this association, answer the same. This I did under date of June 16, 1910, as follows:

To The Editor: Usually your editorials not only are interesting and instructive but fair, and are read with pleasure and profit by us in the South. But a late editorial relative to the failure of two cotton firms in Alabama and Mississippi is misleading, unjust and offensive. It indorses an untruthful report as to the animus of our people towards "Yankees and Britishers," holds up our farmers as dishonest and casts a gratuitous slur on our commercial integrity. It is the wish and hope of all our people that the men guilty of fraud in these cotton bills of lading shall be punished. They ought to wear prison stripes. It is true that their prominence (and means) will be against chances of conviction. But it is no more true south than north, west than east. And certainly it is not true that there is a "general satisfaction current that these culprits had gotten the better of Yankees and Britishers." It is spoken of only in terms of censure.

By stating that "many farmers repudiated their future cotton contracts with merchants," and then reading us a lecture on "the deplorable state of (our) commercial morality," you produce the impression that the southern farmer as a class is dishonest. In some cases "repudiation" was in fact the simple inability to comply with contracts, in others there were honest contentions over terms. The "dishonest" repudiations were in fact too few to warrant your wholesale impeachment. And why single out the cotton grower for your animadversions? He is no more prone to "lay down" on his future contracts than is the grain grower or the cotton spinner.

We are willing to accord to our brothers of the north and east a high standard of commercial integrity, but neither this virtue nor any other belongs exclusively to those living north of the Ohio river. And the south has no monopoly in "dishonest" farmers, manufacturers, tradesmen or financiers. Nor is it the only place where violators of the law because of high standing and great wealth, go unwhipped.

The editor was fair enough to publish this letter promptly in its columns. Recently on the verdict of a Mississippi jury three of these forgers were sentenced by a Mississippi judge to prison terms, and now wear the stripes of a criminal. It remains to be seen whether these over-ready and too zealous critics will make the amende honorable and give it the same publicity they gave their strictures.

Not long since a young man by the name of Whitaker, who had been issuing forged checks on several banks in the eighth district was sentenced to prison at a term of court held in Vicksburg.

Our secretary has been advised of other frauds or attempted frauds and has promptly notified the members of the association, and referred the cases to officers of the law. Constant vigilance is needed in such matters, and all members are earnestly requested to promptly advise the secretary of any such attempts.

For prosecuting one case the Coffeeville Bank sent me an attorney's bill for $100. It seems to me that this cost should not fall on one member, especially as other members had been victimized by the same person, and I recommended its payment by the association. Of course we cannot pay for prosecuting every little case where purely local, but where the matter is of general interest we should assume its cost.

As an aftermath of these cotton bills-of-lading forgeries there was a covert threat on the part of our British cousins to decline to honor any drafts drawn against cotton shipments unless the ladings and the cotton as to grade and weight were guaranteed by the New York banks, which would in turn demand like guaranty from the country banks. The foreign bankers did not long hold to these extreme demands, but after conference a proposition was made, as embodied in the following telegram sent out to the southern banks by Jos. T. Talbert, vice-president of the National City Bank, of New York City:

"We can settle cotton difficulty in no other way than by giving Europeans a guaranty covering not only integrity of validated bills of lading but guaranteeing against forgery. Europeans propose to form a guaranty company of large capital for that purpose furnishing such insurance at a cost not more than 6 or 7 cents per bale. They will invite interests on this side to join. We are favorable to this settlement and hope you will use your influence with bankers and cotton trade generally to cheerfully accept this as best possible solution; otherwise cotton movement will be seriously impeded next week. If accepted we can procure necessary extension of time. Would appreciate your co-operation and an expression of your opinion.

Answering for myself I replied as follows:

"I think guaranty company unnecessary. Banks where cotton bills of lading originate should guarantee authorization and genuineness of agents' signature. Our courts will hold railroad companies for all cottons thus receipted for, and spinners can protect themselves as to values by dealing with only such firms as will ship proper grades under correct weights."

State Bank Guaranty

The fad of state bank guaranty laws, so rampant a few years ago, is losing favor in an almost geometrical progression. It first appeared in American banking some seventy years ago, and after a fitful life of a few short years slept well for more than half a century. The knock-out blows it lately has received will doubtless soon put it to sleep again. May its slumbers be forever undisturbed.

For the second time the governor appointed A. G. Campbell, W. M. Anderson and myself as delegates to represent our state at the convention of the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks. This meeting was held in Washington City on Sept. 12-14, 1910. It was my good fortune and pleasure to attend. The meeting was a great success. A prominent theme was co-operation between national and state bank examiners. On this subject a splendid paper was presented by Comptroller Murray. The principles of banking are the same whether applied to national or state banks, and the supervision should if possible be along identical lines. The great end was a cordial relation among the examiners whereby the fullest and most accurate knowledge of conditions of both kinds of banks in any location might be acquired.

The question of having the association through its secretary become the agent of some fidelity insurance company for bonding officers and employees of members was referred to me. For many reasons it seemed to me very objectionable. In the first place, we would be competing with some of our good customers in a line of business foreign to banking. Secondly, should the company fail to pay promptly any loss sustained by a member, such member would straightway blame us with foisting on him a company given to contesting, and claim that we morally were bound to make good its loss.

New Transit Plan

The work of printing the new transit plan has been placed with Rand-McNally Company, Chicago. The book is now in type and in the course of a few days more will be ready to go out to bankers who wish to try the numerical system. The executive council at Nashville approved the plan as developed and there can be little doubt of its general adoption. Bankers all over the country are taking keen interest in the matter.

Some years ago an attempt was made by the clearing house section of the association to establish a uniform system whereby the larger clearing house cities were designated by letters and the banks therein by numbers. But this plan was not sufficiently comprehensive in its scope, as it was necessarily limited to the letters of the alphabet and did not include even all of the clearing house cities, not to mention towns and cities without clearing houses. The result has been that each bank in the country having a large list of country correspondents has been forced to supply its own system of numbers to those correspondents, so that the larger banks found themselves with as many numbers as they had correspondents.

About a year ago the Texas Bankers Association adopted a numbering system of its own and proceeded to put it into effect with apparent success. It was evident that other states would soon follow and that there would be a score or more of systems of numbering by states without any uniformity as to the principle of its application.

In order to obviate this the clearing house section of the national body met in Chicago last December and considered this matter with a view of adopting a uniform system. There were present at that meeting:

C. H. Marston, National Shawmut Bank, Boston.

S. D. Bullock, First National Bank, Boston.

W. G. Schroeder, Continental and Commercial National Bank, Chicago.

J. A. Walker, Corn Exchange National Bank, Chicago.

C. R. McKay, First National Bank, Chicago.

Carl A. Palmer, First National Bank, Cleveland.

J. W. Hoopes, Austin National Bank, Austin, Texas.

C. J. Grant, American Exchange National Bank, Dallas, Texas.

Forrest Mathis, Commonwealth National Bank, Dallas, Texas.

Karl Woodward, Colorado National Bank, Denver, Colo.

George M. Hauk, First National Bank, Denver, Colo.

J. G. MacLean, Security National Bank, Minneapolis, representing Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mauritz Pyk, Whitney-Central National Bank, New Orleans.

O. Howard Wolfe, Philadelphia National Bank, Philadelphia.

Brown A. Patterson, Second National Bank, Pittsburgh.

H. C. Burnett, National Bank of Commerce, St. Louis.

A committee was appointed consisting of W. G. Schroeder, secretary of the Continental and Commercial National Bank; J. A. Walker, transit manager of the Corn Exchange National, and C. R. McKay, transit manager of the First National, all of Chicago, to perfect a system of numbering applicable to all banks, whether national, state or private, in the United States. This committee made its report to Chairman Van Vechten of the clearing house section last month and was invited to attend the executive council meeting of the American Bankers Association at Nashville.

Much to the credit of the members of the committee who have devoted a great deal of time to this matter, the plan in the report provided for the grouping of banks by central reserve cities, reserve cities and by states, and assigning to each individual bank a specific number received the unqualified approval of the executive committee of the clearing house section and of the executive council of the bankers' association.

It was decided to authorize the publication of an official directory, assigning and containing these numbers. This directory is to be a permanent thing and will have to be revised once a year or oftener.

C. B. West

The American Institute of Banking is becoming recognized more and more throughout the country as a substantial means for training young bank men successfully for official bank positions. Another example of an active chapter man being promoted to official position, is found in the announcement made recently, that C. B. West, of the Seattle National, will be first assistant cashier of the National City Bank of Seattle, which will open for business in the Puget Sound city, June 1st. The Commercial State Bank has been purchased by J. W. Maxwell, formerly vice-president of the Seattle National Bank, and associates, and will be capitalized for $500,000 with surplus of $100,000. Mr. West is one of the progressive and popular young bank men of Seattle and is known as a business getter.

Banking Powers

On Saturday, May 6th, John W. Thomas, assistant cashier, Central Trust Company of Illinois, Chicago, delivered an address to the Missouri Mining Association composed of the senior and junior classes of the University of Missouri School of Mines at Rolla, Missouri. Substantial extracts from the addresses are here reproduced:

"The statutes of the state in which my own home and the concern with which I am connected are located, constitute an excellent code of laws relative to institutions with banking powers, this code being in many ways similar to the national act. Private banking concerns are not subject to any of the restrictions and examinations to which national and state banks are. In days past, state institutions have been permitted to issue their own notes as currency, and those of us who are interested are familiar with the difficulties experienced by the nation in connection with these notes, these difficulties giving rise to the appellation wildcat currency which has been applied to that form of circulating medium. Under existing laws, while the issuance of currency by state banks has not been specifically prohibited, this object has been accomplished by national legislation, which imposes a tax of 10 per cent upon all currency of that character issued, and as such circulation could by no possibility earn for the issuing institution any such annual income as the amount represented by this tax there is none of it now in circulation. The present money of the country consists of the gold, silver and minor coinages, legal tender notes, treasury notes, gold and silver certificates and national bank notes, the latter issued under conditions imposed by the national banking act by institutions incorporated under that act, these conditions, among other things, requiring the deposit of bonds with the treasurer of the United States as security for the payment of these notes.

"In addition to the various classes of money just referred to one may well add as part of the circulation medium of the country the bank check, as under present conditions by far the largest number of business transactions are settled not by the use of actual money but by the giving of a check upon a bank, some authorities having estimated that over 90 per cent of the total volume of business is settled in this manner.

"A very important item in the machinery of present day banking is the clearing house. In times past checks drawn upon the various banks within a community were collected by presentation at the counter of each bank by a messenger from each of the other institutions, who collected in money the amount of such checks, it being necessary for every bank to collect its items in this way. As the volume increased the impossibility of handling it in this manner made necessary some arrangement which would obviate it, the result being the clearing house, its only function originally being the payment of checks. This arrangement involved a meeting, at a central point, of representatives of the various institutions, each of whom carried to the clearing house the checks which his bank held drawn upon other institutions represented in the association, accepting from these representatives the checks drawn upon his own bank and either paying in the difference, in the event that the amount of the checks received by him exceeded the amount of those brought, or collecting the difference if the reverse was the case.

"This operation is to-day identical with what it was originally. The Clearing House Association, however, has by a process of evolution grown to be vastly more than a means for the collection of checks. The largest cities of this country have all organized Clearing House Associations and these associations exercise a supervisory function relative to the banking interests of the community. In Chicago, for instance, the association elects at an annual meeting of the representatives from each member bank the officers of the Clearing House Association, and also has what is known as a Clearing House Committee, this committee being a body with executive powers, in connection with the affairs of the association. Matters of general interest are taken up and passed upon by this committee.

"Chicago a few years since inaugurated a system of examination of the banks, members of the association, by an examiner appointed by the association for this purpose, who from time to time with a corps of assistants makes a thorough examination of the affairs of each member. This examination has been found a very desirable addition to our banking methods and is now being very generally adopted throughout the country. It not only assures all the associated banks of the soundness of the various institutions composing the body, but conservative bankers recognize in it a deterrent upon those individuals and institutions which might be disposed to engage in enterprises that would be hazardous and not sound banking. Regarding the individual, there is no country in the world where banking facilities are so universally availed of and the check book so prevalent as in this country of ours.

"As already referred to, a very large and increasing proportion of the banking business of the country is conducted by institutions organized under the banking acts of the various states, a large number of them being denominated Trust Companies, owing to provisions in their charters which permit them to engage in one of the comparatively new phases of banking, namely, trust affairs; and it might be well right here to note the distinction between the term trust as applied to transactions of commercial corporations, in which use the name is now a misnomer owing to changed commercial conditions, and as used in connection with banking.

"The Trust Company of to-day occupies a large field in its relation to the affairs of the community, and as your interests in banking will no doubt have to do largely with corporation matters, and as Trust Companies perform many functions in that connection, it will probably be well to go more fully into details regarding the Trust Company than would otherwise be necessary. The fact that a banking corporation contains in its title in some form, the words Trust Company does not necessarily imply that it is qualified to conduct a strictly trust department, in its affairs. The statutes of Illinois, for instance, provide that an institution may be incorporated with banking powers, the chosen name being Trust Company, and meet all the requirements of this law for the conduct of banking business without, however, qualifying under the act to perform trust functions, permission to engage in the latter phase of the business under Illinois statutes involving a deposit with the auditor of state of acceptable securities before such permission will be granted, the minimum deposit of this kind in cities with a population of 100,000 or upward being $200,000.

"Under this permission the Trust Company is qualified to accept trusts of various kinds, such, for instance, as acting as administrator or executor of estates, guardian of minor heirs, conservator of properties for adults adjudged incompetent to handle their own affairs, representing non-resident owners, acting as trustee in various matters, such as, for instance, the issuance of bonds by corporations, secured by trust deed on their properties; and acting as transfer agent and registrar of stock of corporations, the practice having become very general of having a disinterested but responsible institution take charge of the stock records, especially of corporations whose stock is listed and traded in on the various exchanges of the country, this being a safeguard to guarantee against issuance of stock certificates in excess of the corporation's authorized capital.

"This brings us to a subject which your president suggested would probably be of quite a general interest to you, namely, corporations and their form of organization. A commercial corporation, as you all understand, is an organization effected for the purpose of conducting a certain line or lines of business and may perhaps be said to involve the element of partnership, only to the extent that it is composed of more than one individual. One of the advantages of a corporation is the facility which it affords for obtaining capital. An individual may have a business project which is susceptible of large development and not possess sufficient means to carry it out himself. By enlisting the interest of others he may obtain the requisite capital and consequently incorporate the business, the amount of its capitalization being determined by the conditions which enter into the enterprise, certificates of stock in the corporation being issued to the various individuals as their interest is enlisted, according to the amount of money that they may be willing to invest. Another advantage of incorporation is the fact that in most states liability of stockholders is limited, in many instances to the amount of their investment. This, however, is not the case invariably, as, for instance, the laws of California, which provide that the stockholders of a corporation are responsible for its debts to the extent of their proportionate holding of the capital stock of the concern. That is, assuming that an individual owns one-tenth of the entire capital stock of a corporation, he would be responsible for one-tenth of its indebtedness, and, furthermore, this liability could not be averted by transfer of his stock, but he would be responsible in the case of the institution getting into financial difficulties, for his proportion of such of the indebtedness as was incurred during the time the stock was owned and held by him.

"In forming a corporation the capital stock may be all of one class, in which case it would be known as capital stock. It may, however, be made in different classes such as preferred stock and common stock, or first and second preferred stock and common stock, and the conditions pertaining to the various classifications of stock would be designated by the articles of incorporation. These terms may vary considerably, that is, preferred stock may have a preference in regard to both earnings and assets of the company. It may be preferred as to assets and not as to earnings, or it may be preferred as to earnings and not as to assets. The dividends which it may be entitled to may also be subject to the articles of incorporation. In other words, preferred stock may be entitled to a certain dividend, the amount fixed by its terms, if earned, and in the event that it is not earned carries no liability on the part of the company for the payment of dividend for that particular period, or it may by its terms be cumulative, in which case it would be entitled to dividends at the rate named, out of any earnings of the company before there would be any dividend payment to the common stock. To illustrate: Assuming that a corporation conducted its business for a period of say five years without having made any money, when such concern becomes profitable if the preferred stock were a cumulative 6 per cent stock the preferred stock would be entitled to accumulated dividends amounting to 30 per cent of its face value before the common stock would be entitled to any participation in the profits.

"In forming a corporation in a large number of and, in fact, most instances, properties are taken over and paid for in stock of the corporation at a certain valuation. The importance to the stockholder of having the full paid value of his stock established beyond question lies in the fact that in the event of a corporation getting into financial difficulties if it is possible for creditors to prove that any of the stock of the corporation was issued without being actually paid for in full, an action at law for the collection of the unpaid portion of the stock would lie against the holders of such stock and the amount proven unpaid be collectible.

"In connection with mining corporations, under certain jurisdictions, a stock is by its terms issued as non-assessable stock, the result being that for the operations of the property the directors could not assess stock, fully paid for, but the necessary funds must be obtained either by increasing the amount of stock by a proper legal process or raising them in some other way. Under other jurisdictions, however, the laws of Idaho, for instance, non-assessable stock cannot be issued by a mining corporation, but assessments may by action of the board of directors of the company be made against outstanding stock for the purpose of carrying on the enterprise or meeting its debts.

"We will now assume that the general plan of organization of your corporation has been determined upon and that you are considering the amount of money necessary to carry out the proposition. Necessity frequently imposes conditions which have to be met, in which case the operations will have to be adapted to the money available. For the sake of example we will assume, however, that this is not the case and that it only remains to be determined just what amount of capital is desirable. It is important right here that an ample allowance for what is denominated working capital be made, it being very easy to underestimate this item. Remember at all times that in starting a corporation, whether it be for the purpose of manufacture or mining or any other branch of business, that, in addition to the actual cost of the installation of such plant as may be necessary, working capital sufficient to tide over the period between the commencement of operations and the time when the products of that business bring returns involves the use of considerable money for the day to day operations.

"Assuming that your enterprise is a manufacturing one, you must first acquire your site. Possibly you will be fortunate enough to find a building adapted to your needs, otherwise it will be necessary to erect this. The installation of machinery takes time as well as money and after you have completed all of these preliminary details and are ready to turn out your product, remember that in addition to the time necessary for the manufacture of the product itself, before your returns will begin to come in goods must be sold, shipped, and transported to destination, and that as a large proportion of the business of the country is done on a credit basis, and various lines of industry have adopted different general terms of payment, a considerable period of time may still elapse before the actual money returns for products sold are received. In the meantime purchases of raw material must continue to be made, bills for labor met, machinery maintenance and fuel provided for. Therefore, as we have heretofore stated, a sufficiency of working capital is of the utmost importance.

"The conditions which will prevail in case you are organizing a mining corporation will be relatively identical, the difference being only in the fact that the expenditure will be along other lines than those which we have enumerated. For instance, substitute for raw materials, etc., the cost of sinking shafts, tunnels and those various other items of development work with which you, gentlemen, are vastly more familiar than I am. At this stage of your corporate existence this capital must ordinarily be provided by the sale of stock, as, not being an established, going concern, your borrowing powers are limited. After the concern has been under way for a time sufficient to demonstrate the success of the enterprise and the efficiency of its management it is then properly in a position to ask credit accommodations of its banker. As the enterprise develops after it has become what is known technically as a seasoned proposition, showing good profits as a result of operation and competent administrative ability at its head, the outlook may be such as to warrant a considerable expansion, and under the circumstances outlined the money for such expansion is frequently obtained, not by the sale of stock, but by a bond issue secured by the property. The advantage in this mode of financing being that the stockholders are thus able to retain for themselves the increasing profits of the business by paying a fixed rate of interest on such funds as are obtained by the mortgage securing the bond issue, these funds being paid back either by all of the bonds maturing at one fixed date, or serially from time to time, in either case with interest during the period which they are outstanding. In borrowing money in this manner you will have to satisfy whoever purchases your bonds that the concern is engaged in a profitable business; that the outlook for the continuation of its prosperity is excellent; that it is ably managed, and that values represented in its tangible property are ample security for the obligation created by the bond issue."

Wheat Unsettled

Wheat prices showed substantial gains Wednesday, the undertone of the market being strong during the greater part of the session. Local traders who sold the day before were on the buying side, covering shorts. Commission houses absorbed the offerings on the break. Liverpool was relatively firm, while the news from the Southwest was inclined to make the shorts nervous. Prices for the day were $\frac{3}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ cents to $\frac{3}{4}$ to $\frac{7}{8}$ cents up.

There was no pressure to sell wheat, the effect of the rains in the spring wheat country being offset by the reports of hot weather in the Southwest. In Oklahoma and Western Kansas the crop is still badly in need of more moisture, giving the reports of high temperature an unusually bullish complexion. Trade in May was without special feature.

Rains were quite general in the Northwest and Canada, according to private reports. All the stations shown on the weather map did not indicate the precipitation was general south of the Canadian line. Predictions, however, were for unsettled conditions, with general rains and lower temperatures. This did not cause much selling, as the crowd had all sold on the rains the previous day. The hot weather southwest was regarded as more important.

May wheat has ranged from 93 to 95 cents and July 86 to 88.

Sentiment in corn is a good deal mixed. Many traders are looking for big receipts, and some of the commission houses are advising the selling of long corn. The slow cash demand has had a good deal to do with changing sentiment recently. It was noticed that there was good buying again by the recent bull leaders, however, and Cudahy brokers were again credited with buying considerable corn.

May stands at $53\frac{1}{2}$ and July 52.

MISSOURI BANK DEPOSITS

Deposits in Missouri banks have increased $16,000,000 during the last year, according to State Bank Commissioner John E. Swanger, who was just made public the compilation of the financial statement of the banks and trust companies of the state under the call of March 7th. "The financial condition of the banks and trust companies of Missouri, as shown on March 7th of this year, reveals a decided improvement over that of January 31, 1910," said

Mr. Swanger, "and a decided increase in most items is shown by the statement of November, 1910." The increases shown in 1910 are classified as follows: Loans and discounts, $10,145,975; cash and exchange, $14,604,595; capital, $2,040,864; surplus and undivided profits, $2,001,604; deposits, $15,218,090; bills payable and discounts $1,907,763. The statement of March 7, 1911, as compared with that of November 10, 1910, shows there was an increase in the loans and discounts of $2,167,441; cash and exchange, $15,672,645; capital, $724,698, while deposits increased $16,131,542.

"The statement is very satisfactory," said Mr. Swanger, "for the reason that it shows that Missouri banks and trust companies are still steadily growing, not only in strength, but in volume of business. An increase in deposits of $15,000,000 over that of a year ago, and $16,000,000 over that of November 10, 1910, indicates that they are keeping pace with the general growth and development of the state. The increases are spread over country and city institutions proportionately. Bankers of Missouri may be well satisfied with the showing made during the last few years."

Rogues' Gallery

What is believed to be the first rogues' gallery in the country to be kept by a state banking department, has been started in Topeka, Kan., by State Bank Commissioner J. N. Dolley. It is for bank robbers only and Mr. Dolley has the promise of assistance of detective agencies, police departments and thief-catching organizations generally in making his gallery complete and valuable. In specializing on yeggmen, Mr. Dolley wants pictures and descriptions of bank and postoffice robbers and other high class criminals from police and prison officials of surrounding states.

Speaking of the new department Mr. Dolley said: "Banks are not robbed in the summer time and I will have all summer to get ready for the bunch when it starts in to work next fall. It is a peculiar but easily explained fact that robbers let the banks alone in the summer. They scout around and lay their plans for winter but do not do any real robbing. The reason is that in the summer time the people sleep with windows open, out of doors, upon porches and even on the streets some places.

The first man to get his picture and description in Mr. Dolley's gallery of undesirables is Henry Bower, who pleaded guilty to the murder of Deputy Sheriff Fowler at Hutchinson, Kan., last fall. Bower is said to be a bank and postoffice thief. Fowler had arrested Bower when the latter turned and shot him down. Bower was convicted of first degree murder and is now in the state penitentiary for life.

PREMIUM ON GRAIN BONDS

Ward county bonds in North Dakota, to provide seed grain for farmers, were sold at auction to the Second National of Minot at $801 premium for $50,000. T. L. Beiseker, Fessenden, N. D., bid $795 and the Wells and Dickey Company of Minneapolis $500. The bonds run two years at 7 per cent.

A study of the distribution of the exports of manufactures shows that in some instances the growth was confined to a few countries only, while in other cases it extended to practically every section of the commercial world.

The Commercial Bank of Checotah, Okla., has increased its capital from $25,000 to $50,000. The directors are A. O. Johnson, W. T. Miller and H. L. Woods, all of Checotah.

Philadelphia

A number of the national banks declared their May dividends last week and some institutions made substantial additions to their surplus account. Besides paying the usual semi-annual distributions increases in surplus were made by various banks, as follows: Second National Bank, $50,000; Corn Exchange National Bank, $50,000; Commonwealth Title & Trust Company, $150,000. The surplus of these banks is now: Second National Bank, $500,000; Corn Exchange National Bank, $1,500,000; Commonwealth Title & Trust Company, $1,250,000. The Fidelity Trust Company increased its dividend rate from 8 per cent to 9 per cent quarterly. Besides the bank dividends, corporation disbursements to stockholders in this city include those of the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Company, Cambria Steel Company, Pennsylvania Steel preferred and Reading second preferred.

April bank clearings in this city were $621,700,185 which, with the exception of that month a year ago, when they were $621,700,186, were the largest in May in the last four years. The April clearings in 1909 were $582,045,428, and in 1908 $486,963,351. In the current year, however, the turnover was larger in January and March than in April, which was not so in some other years.

Money continues to accumulate in the banks, which shows the wisdom of the recent reduction in rates. The reserve increased again last week, the amount being $2,848,000, which makes the surplus greater than in any recent year, at this season, with exception of 1908, the year following panic period. The demand for funds and accommodation from mercantile and other sources is restricted. The average reserve of the banks is close to 30 per cent. One bank reported less than 25 per cent.

Philadelphia banks and trust companies on May 1st held $2,524,465 of the total $8,950,654 general fund of the state treasury deposited in Pennsylvania banking institutions. Of the $2,438,317 sinking funds, Philadelphia banks and trust companies held $252,318.

William A. Law, vice-president of First National Bank, and Roland L. Taylor, president of Philadelphia Trust Company, attended the meeting of the Executive Council of American Bankers Association, at Nashville.

William F. Harrity, a director of Equitable Trust Company, is enjoying a brief stay at Virginia Hot Springs.

Leslie M. Shaw, president of First Mortgage Guarantee & Trust Company, who recently returned from Spokane, remarked that politics seemed to be taking precedence over business considerations.

Girard Trust Company recently sold at 923, an advance from 910, the previous public sale price.

Directors of the Commonwealth Title, Insurance & Trust Company have declared a regular semiannual dividend of 6 per cent, and have added $150,000 to surplus, making that fund $1,250,000.

AMERICAN NATIONAL OF PENSACOLA

Among the growing southern banks the American National of Pensacola (Fla.) is entitled to attention. It was organized in the latter part of 1900 and already occupies the very best building on the very best corner in its city. The bank occupies the ground floor of a ten story bank and office building fitted up and equipped in the most modern style. Chas. W. Lamar is the president and occupies a handsome office just inside the main entrance where he is prepared to greet cordially the friends and customers of the bank. The office of Milton E. Clark, vice-president and cashier, is equally prominent and practically open to the public. He has a private room adjoining with every modern utility. The counters and grills are of marble and there is a capacious vault room and a safe deposit department. The capital of the American National is $300,000 with a surplus of close to $150,000. The deposits are over one million and a half, showing that in the ten years of its existence the bank has made rapid and substantial progress.

Pittsburgh

The debating team of the Scranton Chapter American Institute of Banking, defeated Philadelphia Chapter team in a debate on "Conservation." The victory makes the Scranton men eligible to compete with Pittsburgh Chapter team for a silver cup offered by Pennsylvania Bankers Association to the victors in a series of debates that have been arranged.

Members of Pittsburgh Chapter American Institute of Banking gave a thoroughly enjoyable and high-class minstrel performance, which crowded the house to the door. The local hits were many and excellent.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Manufacturers' Bank, of the South Side, the following directors were elected: Edward Hogan, A. H. Heisey, P. M. Pfeil, William E. Sankey, George Diehl, Daniel P. Berg and Thomas N. Stevenson.

Pittsburgh Trust Company paid the regular quarterly dividend of 3 per cent May 1st.

Second National of Pittsburgh paid the regular quarterly dividend of 2½ per cent May 1st.

Directors of Peoples' Trust Company declared a dividend of 1½ per cent, payable May 10th.

The local stock market remained comparatively dull the last week and yet displayed a steady to firm undertone. One of the most prominent movements was in Westinghouse Air Brake, which advanced to 149¼, the highest point in two years.

The bond house of E. W. Clark Company, Philadelphia, has taken over the business of Redmond & Company in Philadelphia and the Pittsburgh district, and will be represented in Pittsburgh by John D. Liggett, who has been the representative here of Redmond & Company and who will retain his offices in the Union Bank building. George W. Kendrick, who was the Philadelphia representative of Redmond & Company becomes a member of the E. W. Clark Company.

CENTRAL NATIONAL OF ST. PETERSBURG

Among the most active of the Florida banks should be mentioned the Central Bank of St. Petersburg. Its list of directors embraces the prominent names of the city and the bank shows resources of nearly one million dollars. It maintains a handsome safety deposit vault with boxes for rent, and does a fine business in foreign exchange and travelers' checks. Its statement of condition of March 7, 1911, shows that its affairs are conducted in a skillful and scientific way.

Preparatory to a general reorganization of the All Night and Day Bank of Kansas City, C. A. Bonds, has resigned the presidency and H. W. Richardson, president of the American Union Trust Company, has gone on the board of directors. It is said that new capital is to be put into the institution and new policies adopted. A new president will be elected within a few days.

Spokane, May 9.—“There is every indication that the increase in the value of agricultural lands in the state will establish another record,” said Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National Bank and head of the Spokane Chamber of Commerce, on receiving the United States census bureau's preliminary report on Washington's farm statistics, which places the total value of farm lands and buildings at $570,142,000 in 1910, as against $115,610,000 in 1900, an increase of $454,532,000, or 393 per cent. The report shows that the value of farm lands alone increased from $99,311,000 to $513,918,000, or 419 per cent during the same period.

Fails at Forgery Game

Believing he is smarter than some of the check forgers in state prisons, James Killgallen, 19 years of age, tried to put one over at the Old National Bank of Spokane, a few days ago. W. D. Vincent, cashier, saw the trick and before the youth could get away he was in the toils and held in bonds pending trial. “The game appeared to be easy,” he said, “and I thought I could beat it, but I guess I'm not half as clever as I made myself believe I was. The result is I was caught with the first one.”

Leo Cramer, head of the Idaho State Bank at Hailey, Idaho, which failed last fall, was found guilty at Boise of the charge of accepting deposits when he knew the bank was insolvent, and was sentenced to an indeterminate term of from six months to two years in the state penitentiary. The court refused to impose a fine, other than the costs of the trial.

General Financial News

Thomas H. Brewer, president of the Fidelity National Bank; W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National Bank, and Charles A. McLean, cashier of the Traders' National Bank, have been appointed to formulate plans for the organization of an eastern branch of the Washington State Bankers Association, which will have its headquarters in Spokane.

Charles A. McLean, cashier of the Traders' National Bank, was the principal speaker at the last meeting of Spokane Chapter of the American Institute of Banking. He discussed the work of the Washington State Bankers Association.

W. B. Hawkins, president of the Bonners Ferry Bank at Bonners Ferry, Idaho, has been appointed a member of the commission of the first drainage district in northern Idaho, organized by land owners in the Kootenai valley. The other commissioners are: Charles G. Reeder of Spokane, and Professor Elliott of Moscow, Idaho. Several thousand acres of land will be reclaimed.

D. A. Holland, manager of the Security Trust Company of Spokane, has received a certificate from Fred E. Farnsworth, general secretary of the American Bankers Association, New York, admitting the company to membership.

J. P. Morgan and Company have purchased $3,000,000 Atlantic Coast Line bonds.

HIGH PRICE FOR BONDS

The establishment of a new high price for New York City 4¼ per cent bonds was an incident in the Wednesday bond trading on the stock exchange. At the moment bonds of the highest grade are in relatively better demand than bonds in the intermediate class, which lately enjoyed much greater activity than has been displayed during the last few days. An interesting feature of current transactions in short term investments is the fact that the New York market has been buying back from Europe blocks of various corporation note issues which were placed on the other side during the last few months. The explanation lies in the fact that the present extreme ease in our money market supplies the market for these short term investments better than that which can be commanded in Europe.

J. H. McELDOWNEY DEAD

J. H. McEldowney, vice-president of National City Bank, New York, died, Sunday, at Ospedaletti, Italian Riviera, of valvular heart trouble. He formerly lived in Chicago and followed the vocation of editor.

Seattle

M. F. Backus, president of National Bank of Commerce, has resigned as a regent of the University of Washington. At the time of Mr. Backus' appointment by Gov. Hay, during the recent session of the legislature, a fight was waged on his confirmation on the grounds that he was a stockholder and bondholder in a corporation which is improving a ten-acre state-owned tract in the heart of the city.

J. A. Hall, vice-president of First National has just returned from a five weeks' trip in Europe. Mr. Hall stated on his return that he noticed a very strong sentiment in London favoring investments in Western Canada. He stated that large sums of English money have been sent to Canada for investment in farm lands.

While the supply of cash in Seattle banks is large and reserves are just about as high as they ever were, interest rates are firm, averaging about 6½ per cent for all kinds of loans. Most choice loans to regular customers are made on the basis of 6 per cent, while smaller loans have been made during the past two weeks as high as 8 per cent.

The fact that rates have not responded to the large supply of available money is attributed by bankers to the fact that Seattle banks will be called upon shortly to furnish large sums of money to finance the fish and fruit output of the state. Bankers declare the demand for money from country banks will be unusually strong during the coming summer and fall and that they cannot let their reserves run down at this time.

At a meeting of the Northwestern Commercial Company the sale of the Northwestern Fisheries Company to the Booth Fisheries Company was ratified. Six acres of land in this harbor were transferred to the Alaska Steamship Company, which announces that it will build wharves, docks and coal bunkers on the land. Steps were taken for the dissolution of the Northwestern Commercial Company, which was formerly a holding company for the Guggenheim-Morgan syndicate.

EASTERN BANK'S ENTERPRISE

The Lowell Trust Company of Lowell, Mass., celebrated its twentieth anniversary by installing a twenty-five horse power, burglar-proof automobile for carrying money to and from the bank for the accommodation of the various business houses and corporations of the city and suburbs of Lowell.

DEMAND FOR SUBWAY BONDS

A considerable demand has sprung up in New York for Chicago Subway bonds. The issue is traded in on the curb. The private interests in the company now look hopefully to the telephone end of the enterprise to pull them out of their losses. The telephone branch of the business is being “boomed.”

Los Angeles

H. K. Scott was elected cashier of Oil & Metals Bank & Trust Company to succeed L. D. Williams, who remains as secretary, but has been placed in charge of the branch bank at Taft.

Bankers of Los Angeles have been informed by the city attorney, that they will not be required in the future to bear any part of the municipal bonded debt or interest. He holds that the provisions of constitutional amendment No. 1, which provides a new system of revenue and taxation, specifically eliminates all banks from such assessment.

The decision affects only state and savings banks, as national banks have been exempt, except for personal property. It is roughly estimated that this will take approximately $20,000,000 in assessable value off the tax rolls for interest and sinking fund. The interest and sinking fund rate was 58 cents last year, but will be higher this year. Based on last year's rate, the amount lost to the city would be about $116,000.

The German-American Savings Bank has just published a circular called "The Men and Their Records," which contains a portrait and short biography of each of the bank's officers.

GILLETT ON BANKING LAWS

At the weekly luncheon of the Commonwealth Club, San Francisco, ex-Gov. Jas. N. Gillett said: "If the present state banking law were properly enforced it would be impossible to loot a bank. The panic of 1907 caused an investigation into the banking laws of our state. It was found that there were few laws on this subject and that the banking of our state was permitted to go along about as it pleased. A commission was appointed composed of members of the senate and assembly to make an inquiry into the banking business. The bankers appointed a committee to work with this committee. The result was the present banking act, which has been declared by bankers throughout the United States to be one of the safest and best of state banking laws. All that is necessary to stop the looting of banks is properly to enforce this law."

DEERE & COMPANY ISSUE BONDS

It is announced that White, Weld & Company, of New York and Chicago, have purchased from Deere & Company of Moline, Ill., the manufacturers of farming implements, an issue of $5,000,000 five per cent serial gold notes, due in from one to five years.

PREDICTS LOWER PRICES

Patrick Cudahy says everything on the provision list is going lower because too many fat hogs are coming. He expects the hog supply to increase throughout the summer months.

Des Moines, May 12.—The address of former Comptroller Charles G. Dawes of Chicago on the Aldrich plan was the feature of the meeting of Group Six in Des Moines, Friday night. Mr. Dawes commended the Aldrich plan in highest terms. He declared that it will give to the business interests all the advantages of the central bank without the disadvantages. The address was given closest attention and attracted much favorable comment.

More than 225 bankers attended the group meeting. There was no session in the afternoon although the visiting bankers were guests at a theatre party given by the Des Moines Bankers Club.

In the evening the banquet at the Savery began shortly after six o'clock. Following the banquet, a short business meeting was held and Mr. Dawes was introduced as the speaker of the evening. There were no other speakers. It was expected that S. M. Leach would be endorsed for president of the Iowa Bankers Association, as this action was taken by the group last year. However no endorsement of anyone was given this year.

A. E. Hindorf of Newton, formerly secretary of the group, was chosen president to succeed John W. Foster of Guthrie Center who refused to be a candidate for another term. S. J. Pooley of Grinnell was elected secretary. Secretary Hindorf in his report stated that there are 254 banks in the group and that 219 of them are members. Of these there are 85 savings banks, 44 nationals, 34 state, 52 private, 4 trust companies.

Other Chicago bankers who were present were William A. Tilden, A. Erlaud, Rufus C. Dawes and Francis McMillen. A. J. Earling, president of the Milwaukee railroad was also a guest of honor.

Mr. Dawes and the Des Moines Bankers Club were given votes of thanks.

Early in the day, bankers as they registered were asked to vote on the Aldrich plan. The votes showed that the Aldrich plan would win two to one but as the voting progressed, so much confusion arose that it was impossible to make an accurate determination of final results.

Group Nine in Session

Group Nine had a decidedly interesting session at Osceola, Tuesday, May 2d. The meetings were held in the K. of P. rooms with Grant McPherrin of Clearfield, chairman of the group, in charge. The address of welcome was given by Mayor Carl Dare. Chairman McPherrin accepted the city's hospitality on behalf of the visiting bankers. Henry Wallace of Des Moines, president of the National Conservation Congress, spoke on the policy of conservation and what it means to Iowa and the nation. W. T. Fenton, vice-president of the National Bank of the Republic of Chicago, was next on the program. Then came James G. Berryhill of Des Moines who spoke on, "Recent Legislation Regarding Taxation of the Banks of Iowa." This was instructive and of much value to the bankers in attendance. At 5:30 dinner was served by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist church in the parlors of the church. It was a real banquet and was much enjoyed. Toasts were responded to by C. A. Barr, C. T. Cole, Jr., L. E. Crist, W. A. Hopkins and others. A smoker and musical program at K. of P. Hall concluded one of the most enjoyable sessions ever held by the bankers of the group. Bert Teal of Mt. Ayr was elected new chairman and N. C. Hoffman of Murray was re-elected secretary.

Group Eight of Davenport

The bankers of Group Eight met at Davenport Thursday. There was a good attendance and the meeting was enthusiastic. Chairman G. E. Bartholomew called the bankers together at 2 o'clock in the Commercial Club rooms. Following the address of welcome and the usual reports there was an address by John L. Bleakly, state auditor. Mr. Bleakly is always interesting. Representative Ernest R. Moore of Cedar Rapids spoke on the bank legislation passed by the last general assembly. There was an interesting discussion of bank consolidation led by H. F. Giessler of Muscatine and H. W. Flenniken of Olin. Chairman D. H. McKee, vice-president of the German Savings of Davenport, presented the resolutions which report was followed by a general discussion, election of officers and an automobile ride. The banquet was given at 6:30. The Davenport clearing house tendered the automobile ride and the banquet.

Group Three, May 16th

The program for the meeting of Group Three at Charles City, May 16th, has been received by Secretary Hall of the Iowa Bankers Association. The automobile ride precedes the program, which will be given at the K. of P. hall. The election of officers will occur at 5 o'clock. At 6 o'clock the banquet will be given at the Ellis Auditorium. The Charles City bankers and their ladies will be hosts. Arrangements have been made to entertain the visiting ladies at the home of Mrs. A. E. Ellis. They will also join the gentlemen in the auto drive.

Flaw in Taxation Act

Governor Carroll's attention has been called to what may be a fatal flaw in the new law placing a five mill flat rate on moneys and credits and providing a new basis for the taxation of banks. A Des Moines attorney told the governor that the constitution provides that laws imposing taxes must be specific and state definitely what the tax is for. Also that it must contain a complete text of the law which it replaces. It is understood that Attorney-General Cosson has given an informal opinion to the effect that the objections are ungrounded. Doubtless a test case will be necessary to settle the point.

Contest for Presidency

It looks as if there will be a couple of lively contests for president and treasurer of the Iowa Bankers Association at the Mason City meeting. S. M. Leach of Adel, who was endorsed by Group Six for president last year but who was defeated by John McHugh of Sioux City, is understood to be a candidate again this year. E. J. Curtin of Decorah will probably nurse the boomlet started for him at Elkader a few days ago. No other candidates are mentioned as yet. W. G. C. Bagley of Mason City is in the race for treasurer as is also L. C. Gates of Ladora. There will be no opposition to P. W. Hall as permanent secretary.

Banker for Governor

Quite a little political speculation has been indulged in concerning the intentions of E. R. Moore of Cedar Rapids who is credited with having an ambition to be governor of Iowa. Mr. Moore is a well known Cedar Rapids banker who has for some time been a member of the Iowa house of representatives. It is stated that he will be a candidate for governor at the gubernatorial primaries next summer although he has made no announcement to that effect. State Senator W. C. Stuckslager of Lisbon, also a banker, has been persistently mentioned as a gubernatorial possibility.

Miscellaneous Notes

Sears McHenry, cashier of the First National at Denison is original to say the least. Mr. McHenry has taken the contract to keep the streets of Denison sprinkled for $24 per week. It all came about because the city council declared that the streets could not be kept sprinkled for that amount. The Commercial Club declared that they could. Accordingly Mr. McHenry accepted the contract. Early reports were that he had already received numerous applications to sublet the job.

Another report has been made on the postal savings bank at Decorah. The institution has been going now for three months and the bank has on deposit just $722. The number of depositors is 19 and the average amount deposited by each is $38. Boosters for the establishment of the bank are disappointed and bankers are saying, "I told you so," with considerable eclat.

Two checks, said to break the Des Moines record in point of size were cashed last week. The Central State cashed one for $335,000 drawn by the Bankers Life Insurance Company. The German Savings cashed one for $218,107 drawn by the Investors Securities Company in exchange for school bonds recently sold to that company.

A sad double death occurred at DeWitt, when President J. Alex Smith of the DeWitt Savings was bereft of his mother, Mrs. Mary Smith and his only daughter, Mrs. Charles Arthur in less than an hour. Mrs. Arthur was the wife of one of the directors in the bank.

Raymond Sleeper of Sheldon, son of W. H. Sleeper, a Sheldon banker, was married last week at Fort Dodge to Miss Julia Armstrong. The bride's father presented the young couple with a 320 acre farm valued at $50,000 as a wedding gift.

H. P. Dowling of Grand Island, Nebraska, has purchased an interest in the Shelby County State at Harlan and became identified with that institution May first.

The Kossuth County Savings at Algona announces a new $12,000 bank building to be constructed this summer.

G. D. Ellyson, president of the Commercial Savings, Des Moines, is gradually recovering from a severe illness of many weeks. He is in the Ozarks.

ST. PAUL AND PUGET SOUND

The heaviness of St. Paul this week is ascribed to a plan to issue $25,000,000 additional of 4 per cent Puget Sound bonds. On June 30th, last, there were outstanding $123,000,000 of these bonds, all of which were in the treasury of the St. Paul. Since then the outstanding amount has been increased to more than $130,000,000, and the St. Paul has sold $25,000,000 out of its treasury.

The St. Paul owns the entire $100,000,000 capital stock of the Puget Sound, on which a dividend of 2 per cent was paid a few months ago.

BANKERS INDORSE POSTAL PLAN

A request has been sent to Washington by the Stockton (Cal.) Clearing House Association endorsing the postal savings banks and asking that such an institution be established there with a view of keeping much of the money that is being sent to foreign lands in the United States.

TELLER STEALS LARGE SUM

Cleveland, O., May 10.—Julius W. Hopkins paying teller of the First National Bank, was arrested to-day. He is said to have confessed to peculations amounting to $115,000 during the last eight years. A warrant issued by United States District Attorney Day specifically charged him with the theft of $60,000.

When arraigned before United States Commissioner Walther, Hopkins waived a preliminary hearing and was bound over to await action by the grand jury. Bond was fixed at $60,000.

Hopkins was unable to give bail and was taken to jail. It is asserted that he claimed to have lost the money in unsuccessful business deals.

Charles E. Farnsworth, cashier of the First National Bank, made the following statement:

"One of our trusted employees, Julius W. Hopkins, is a defaulter in the sum of $114,850, which amount he has abstracted from express packages containing currency sent us by the national banking department at Washington.

"The bank is fully protected by a blanket guaranty policy issued by London Lloyds, so that the loss will not fall upon the bank."

FOREIGN BANKER HERE

Robert E. Lang, manager of Credito Italiano, Milan, was a visitor at First National, Chicago, last week.

Mr. Lang is an experienced and successful banker and talks entertainingly of America's foreign interests. He says there is an unlimited amount of capital in Europe awaiting investment in the United States. The rates on American securities usually are tempting to foreign capitalists. There is growing confidence in the stability of our industrial affairs. He advises the cultivation of closer relations with all leading countries of the old world.

Money, Banking and Finance from Chicago Viewpoint

A broader and more active money market seems to be assured. While there is no material change in rates of interest as quoted on commercial paper it is apparent that bank funds are finding employment at better figures than have prevailed since December.

That there is less pressure of idle money on the loan market than formerly is indicated by the bringing in of a million dollars of foreign capital, which is placed in a Chicago real estate project at 5 per cent. Another indication is that real estate loans are being made on a somewhat higher basis than earlier in the season. Transactions are reported at 6 to 6½ per cent in many cases, while a month ago the majority of loans were around 5 per cent.

Interior banks have begun to let their wants be known and are shaping up an extensive program for the season. Chicago bankers have helped the situation also by going out into the bond market, placing a number of millions of spare capital in carefully selected municipal and railroad securities.

Banker Tells of Improvement

"A new feature in the financial situation is a broadening demand from interior bankers for funds with which to take care of agricultural operations," said Vice-President August Blum of First National, Chicago, the fore part of the week.

"Rates are not quotably higher but the manifest tendency is upward. There is a clear improvement in the general trade situation, as shown by mercantile loans, but the most notable thing is the call of interior bankers for assistance in financing an extensive farming program. This call seems to embrace the whole West and South. It shows that agriculture is flourishing and that the country is confident.

"It would seem to be logical to look for greater activity in all lines of industry now that the farming element has opened the season in such a hopeful and enterprising way."

Local Real Estate Business

In connection with the local real estate business it transpires that Louis M. Stumer, Benjamin J. Rosenthal and Louis Eckstein have obtained a loan of $1,000,000 from the Scottish Provident Institution of Edinburgh, Scotland, through Emerson B. Tuttle, representing Northcote and Company, and in co-operation with Aldis and Company. Security is the ground leasehold interest and the structure to be known as the North American Building, to be erected at the northwest corner of State and Monroe streets. The loan extends twenty-one years and bears interest at 5 per cent.

The Universal Trading and Supply Company of Maine has given a trust deed to the Chicago Title and Trust Company as trustee for $30,000, for five years at 6½ per cent, secured by the property on Thirty-fifth Street at the southwest corner of Morgan Street, north frontage, 160 by 316 feet.

In another instance, which is quite exceptional since the first of May, a loan of $150,000 on Chicago property is continued at 5 per cent. This is the case of the "Kenwood," the big family hotel and apartment building on Forty-seventh Street and Kenwood Avenue, which has figured in several transactions during the past year. It was sold by George W. Stewart of the Stewart Realty Company, for Richard A. Morley of Chicago, to James E. Powell of Edmonton, Canada, and Frank H. Lane of Columbus, Ohio, the deal involving in all about $500,000. The property was sold a year and a half ago by James B. Drake of New York.

Iron Trade is the Barometer

All eyes are viewing the iron trade, the belief being that this is something of a business barometer. A number of producers seem to be of the opinion that the next turn in the situation will be for the better. There has been considerable talk during the past fortnight of a probable readjustment of prices, which is explained by undercutting among the smaller independent manufacturers.

So far as the United States Steel Corporation is concerned it is pointed out that during the past week or two there has been an improvement in orders received. On several occasions business reached the top notch level of March, averaging 50,000 tons a day. Buying on the part of the railroads has shown an improvement of late, which is regarded by some manufacturers as indicative of a more active demand from this quarter later on. It is estimated that the unfilled tonnage of the United States Steel Corporation in April fell off between 150,000 and 175,000 tons.

Mercantile Business is Fair

Repeat orders on men's wear for fall delivery are being received by a few mills in a way that would indicate that clothiers were doing a very encouraging amount of business, but it is notable that the demand for additional supplies of heavyweight materials is on goods that have been styled well and which were placed on an attractive trading basis at the opening of the season. While the reordering of overcoatings is not as good generally as was the case a week or two ago, nevertheless there are selling agents here and there who are still obtaining an encouraging amount of business on fancies and staples.

Many Western houses are taking advantage of the present condition of trade to improve their facilities. The J. V. Farwell Company, Chicago, are renovating the departments used for wash goods; the Haven and Geddes Company, Indianapolis, will move into new quarters; Hibben, Hollweg and Company, of the same city, plan a new building for their trade. Ely-Walker Dry Goods Company, St. Louis, are making many minor improvements, and several other houses are making changes that mean larger facilities.

W. R. Fleming, president of the People's Savings at Mason City, has been chosen president of the new Farmers Savings at Barnard recently organized with a capital stock of $25,000. Mr. Fleming is also president of the Farmers Savings at Manley.

Woodin, McNear and Moore of Chicago were successful bidders for bonds of $275,000 issued by the city of Ottumwa for purchase of its waterworks and improvement thereof.

The Harris Trust and Savings of Chicago purchased $50,000 in school bonds issued by the school board at Cedar Rapids.

Kansas City bankers are actively at work completing all the details of arrangements for the big convention of Missouri and Kansas bankers May 24th and 25th. On Tuesday R. C. Menefee, treasurer of the Commerce Trust Company, entertained the reservation committee of the local association. This committee has the responsibility of providing accommodations for the 3,000 bankers who are expected to attend. Virgil K. Tuggle, assistant cashier of the New England National Bank, chairman of the committee, outlined the work that had been done and made additional assignments of committeemen. At 3 o'clock of the same day the general entertainment committee met in the office of Jerome Thralls, manager of the Kansas City Clearing House Association, to arrange final details of the work given it. At both meetings the greater enthusiasm prevailed and the assurances of a splendid joint convention were never brighter.

MEN WHO PUT LEBANON ON MAP

W. J. DeVol, President of First National of Lebanon, Ind., also Vice-President of Citizens Trust Company of that city, called on Chicago banking acquaintances last week. In an interview with W. G. Edens, Assistant Secretary of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, Mr. DeVol stated that business conditions were satisfactory in Indiana, Boone county lands selling for prices that indicated confidence in their values and a future prosperity for their locality.

Mr. Edens as a boy lived in Lebanon and recalled the fact that it was Boone county corn which took the first premium or gold medal at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893. The fortunate exhibitor living near Thorntown in that county thereby gained a world wide advertising benefit, which has resulted in his selling seed corn throughout the entire civilized world where corn is grown and naturally resulting in his substantial financial reward.

CHICAGO MEN DOWN STATE

Chicago men who travel for the big banks are daily striking out for the group and state conventions. George Jackson, Chief Clerk of Continental and Commercial National, and W. G. Edens, Assistant Secretary of Central Trust, attended the meeting of Group Six at Charleston this week. Mr. Edens addressed a big Pythian gathering at Benton, the evening of the 9th, besides being on the program for the Charleston meeting. Friday he addressed the members of the Southern Illinois Press Association at Mt. Carmel.

ies and 36 private. All are members of the blue ribbon state organization.

IT was reported at Nashville that some one from Illinois carried a resignation from the council signed by Frank P. Judson, but it was not presented. Probably it would not have been possible to use it there and at the same time have put in any other than J. B. Forgan. Of course there were others who would have been willing to serve out the term.

LOOK who's here! "Joe" Pollard of Fort Madison, Iowa, was in Chicago this week, touring by automobile, and looking fine and hard as nails. He hasn't spoken at a state bankers convention for five years, although from force of habit, his name has been on many programs. It has been customary for Mr. Pollard to reply to requests, saying that as soon as able he will be glad to come. These promises have so accumulated that this delightful speaker must go through a sort of oratorical bankruptcy and start all over again.

ANY state secretary who can land him for this season will make a killing. He's just as good as they come.

CHICAGO banks in the clearing house are about to dedicate a "Money Morgue" under the Central Trust, where clearing balances may be kept rather than carted through the streets daily. Twenty-five millions in gold will be hypothecated.

CERTIFICATES of deposit will be issued to the interested banks and in future these certificates will be exchanged by banks to cover balances. This will do away with the old-fashioned practice of transferring the actual cash in wagons. Probably the last trip of these sturdy old wagons and their special police guards will have been made when the new depository is in operation.

FIVE of Chicago's leading firms of architects have been asked to compete in preparing plans for the new ten million-dollar Continental-Commercial National building. It will cover a full city block, using the site of the old Continental building.

EDWIN F. MACK, vice-president of the Central Trust, is taking a brief vacation, practically the first since the merger of the business of the Royal Trust Company with the Central more than two years ago.

VICE-PRESIDENT HANKEY of the Northern Trust is doing the Kingdom of the Mikado, this week, as a part of his extended tour around the world.

HARRY YEAGER'S resignation from his bank at Lewiston, Mont., to become a national bank examiner created a vacancy, so he says, at once. He made no attempt to do politics with the position, which was the only manly course. The council generally is very patient in cases where councilmen or committeemen find themselves out of a banking position.

PRESIDENT E. E. CRABTREE of the Illinois bankers, now that the A. B. A. convention date has been fixed, is getting ready to settle the time of the Springfield meeting. It will be in October some time.

DOWN at the Charleston Group meeting on Wednesday. Chairman B. F. Harris, of the agricultural committee and W. G. Edens, secretary, discussed a plan to have a banker-farmer congress at Springfield the day before the opening of the Illinois convention.

"We have found out," said Mr. Harris, "that the bankers of this state own upwards of a half million acres of farm land, and Springfield is so favorably located that we might be able to have a sort of agricultural meeting under the auspices of the banker-farmers of our association, in connection with the work our agricultural committee is trying to do. We could get several prominent speakers and there are a number of topics that we could bring up that I am inclined to believe would make the meeting a notable one. It certainly would give the work greater publicity, and would get up such interest that the committees appointed as a result of this meeting ought to make good headway."

F. O. WATTS hasn't rested much lately. After a week of caring for the council meeting in his own city, he jumped to New York for the trust company banquet and from there by fast train to the Mississippi Convention. Yet he comes to bat with a smile of the Sunny Jim variety every time.

"NO, it isn't the bunkers or the fair green that keep me from playing golf," said a big Chicago banker, at Nashville. "It is the one above and the one just below my belt where the trouble lies."

MARSHFIELD, WIS., has a brand new weekly paper—The Marshfield Herald—and the First National of that city showed its appreciation of the enterprise by taking a full page ad for the bank. Yes, the bank is a fine one—established in 1881 as a private and converted to a national in 1891—it has resources of over a million. B. F. McMillan is president and H. G. Hambright is cashier.

MR. WOODS, of the Pioneer Trust, Kansas City, visited Chicago Monday and in conversation with officials of the Central Trust stated that everybody in Kansas City is feeling pretty good about the business situation and outlook for the future. Also they are expecting a large attendance at the joint conventions of Missouri and Kansas the week after next and will welcome a good attendance from the Chicago banks.

SPECIAL committee on trust company legislation, authorized and appointed by the executive council at Nashville, is composed of Oliver C. Fuller, Wisconsin; Lawrence L. Gillespie, New York; F. H. Fries, North Carolina; R. H. Cutler, Connecticut, and F. H. Goff, Ohio.

GEORGE C. VAN TUYL, JR., New York's new banking commissioner, is an Albany banker of fine reputation. We think that even Mr. Cheeney will admit that it is too big a job for an amateur.

JOSEPH T. TALBERT already is playing "first parts" in New York, just as he did in Chicago. His equipment is strictly first class. In all the new deals, such as admitting trust companies and establishing home bank inspection, the New York Clearing House availed of his services. Both of these are Chicago plans and many still claim Talbert as a Chicago banker.

THE Alter bill, regulating private banking houses, has passed the Pennsylvania house finally. It is the purpose of the bill to bring the foreign bankers doing business in the state under the jurisdiction of the state banking commissioner. Only a certain set of private banks were sought by the measure, according to Mr. Alter, but in order to get these it was necessary to include all private banking houses.

MR. ALTER declared that it was objectionable to some large banking houses to make semiannual reports and thus expose their private affairs to public inspection. The bill was drawn so that all such bankers in first and second-class cities, by filing a bond of $100,000 with the state banking commissioner, would be immune from the provisions requiring a semiyearly report. In all other cities, the bond is fixed at $50,000. All private banks not filing the required bond of immunity are required to make a report twice a year to the state banking commissioner and in addition file a bond of not less than $10,000 or more than $50,000.

FRANK O. HICKS, the new vice-president of the Mechanics-American, St. Louis, has sent out in booklet form a little story by the late O. Henry, entitled "Friends in San Rosario," being the experiences of a national bank examiner in Texas. The story is from the famous Henry "Roads of Destiny" series printed by Doubleday, Page and Company. It is a gem and if you didn't get one use a postal on F. O. H.

E. J. CURTIN, of Decorah, was indorsed at the Elkader group meeting for the presidency of the Iowa Bankers Association. A better selection could not be made.

CHEYENNE BANKER HERE

A. H. Marble, vice-president of Stock Growers National Bank, Cheyenne, Wyo., was a caller at Fort Dearborn National the fore part of the week. Mr. Marble stated that the decline in live stock prices had caused some depression in Wyoming but not enough to arrest the progress of the state. The agitation for removing the tariff from wool, or at least materially reducing it, is also having a depressing effect on farmers.

AMERICAN BEET SUGAR

The annual report of the American Beet Sugar Company for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1911, shows gross receipts of $8,344,792, an increase of $1,361,020 compared with the previous year.

The company's net surplus of $1,643,659 was equal to 10.9 per cent earned on $15,000,000 common stock outstanding, compared with 7.31 per cent on a similar amount of stock in the year preceding.

HILL'S LINE LOSES TRAFFIC

The Great Northern's loss in traffic in April amounted to $803,096, or 15 per cent. This increases the gross loss for the fiscal year to $2,571,086. For twelve months the total gross decrease will probably be between $3,250,000 and $3,500,000. Even so, Mr. Hill expects to show better than 9 per cent earned on his stock.

COL. EDWARD HOWE A VISITOR

After leaving Nashville last week Colonel Edward Howe of the Bank of Princeton came up to Chicago and took occasion to extend his acquaintanceship here. Colonel Howe is an entertaining champion of Governor Woodrow Wilson's merits as a political leader.

COOK PUTS ONE OVER

Vice-President Wm. C. Cook of Western Trust and Saving Bank, has put one over on the crowd by exhibiting the finest string of fish seen in Chicago this season. Mr. Cook was in Wisconsin two days. He defies anyone to prove that he didn't catch them.

HIGHLAND BANKER IN TOWN

Louis Koch, cashier of State and Trust Bank, Highland, Illinois, was a visitor at LaSalle Street National, Wednesday. Highland is in a rich dairy district and is enjoying more than the ordinary prosperity of interior towns.

President J. T. Thomas of Bank of Grenada, Mississippi, was a visitor at Chicago Savings Bank the fore part of the week.

Banking Opinion

"I don't see how the supreme court could have decided otherwise in the Standard Oil case," said Byron L. Smith, president of Northern Trust Company, Thursday, "and I can't see that the decision is doing any harm."

"In a general way business people had discounted the ruling. They had taken in sail and were going slowly, months before, not knowing how sweeping the court's decision would be nor how the country's financial interests would respond. That was a good thing, because there was overexpansion in some directions. The country is now in shape to move forward again and will begin to do so before the end of the year."

Way Clear for Business

"The Standard Oil decision makes the way clear for a resumption of industrial activity," said J. C. F. Merrill, president of Chicago Board of Trade. "The nation's commerce will be likely to manifest a restoration of confidence which has long been wanting and which is so needful to commercial health."

Business will Move Forward

"The Standard Oil decision is of the deepest interest to all manufacturers for many reasons, not the least being the partial relief from the doubt which has depressed our business progress for many months," said John Kirby, Jr., president of the National Association of Manufacturers. "Rightly or wrongly, trade has undoubtedly feared the effect of the decision and trade has naturally held back until the status of corporations under the Sherman act has definitely been settled."

"Personally I believe that now, or at least after the second important decision has been delivered, our business will move forward and, following a bountiful harvest, help to restore trade to a more satisfactory and prosperous basis."

West Calls for Money

"There is a little better demand than a few weeks ago," said Ernest A. Hamill, president of Corn Exchange National. "All of it seems to be coming from the country, and particularly from the Far West. The banks in that section are drawing out their deposits, and the coming bank call should show some falling off in that class of deposits from last March. There is no demand for money from local business interests over the normal requirements. Judging from the crop outlook, there ought to be good demand in ninety days or less."

Important Banking Move

E. D. Hulbert, vice-president of the Merchants Loan and Trust Company, who has just returned from New York, reports optimism among Eastern bankers. He says there is universal satisfaction with the action of the New York Clearing House Association in admitting to membership the trust companies on condition of their maintaining a 10 per cent reserve in their own vaults or some other bank, in addition to the requirement for 15 per cent cash in steady reserve.

"It may be considered the most important banking step in years," he said. "Had it been in effect prior to 1907 the brunt of the stringency would not have fallen on a few national banks in New York that were unable to stand the pressure. It would have been scattered among the state banks and trust companies, whose deposits approximately equal those of the national banks and where it should be shared.

"Further, it places those banks under the control of the clearing house with efficient bank examination and rigid control assured. The importance of the New York state banks and trust companies in American banking makes their admission to the clearing house a matter of national interest."

MERGER OF L LINES

Announcement was made in New York of the completion of negotiations for the merging of all elevated railway properties in Chicago. Papers were signed binding the National City Bank of New York as head of the banking syndicate to underwrite $22,000,000 cash to be offered the stockholders in the several companies. A first and refunding bond issue was provided for, to take up the $18,000,000 Northwestern Elevated 4 per cent bonds due September 1st, and an agreement was reached for an alternate offer of securities to be made those stockholders of the elevated roads who may prefer stock in the new company to cash for their holdings.

Festus J. Wade

Chairman Festus J. Wade, of the A. B. A. monetary commission, subcommittee, reports that a plan has been completed whereby state banks and trust companies may be admitted to the national reserve associations, under the new currency and banking plan. Now if the ex senator from Rhode Island will step out of the spot light the play can go on.

LA SALLE STREET NATIONAL

Many statements utterly devoid of truth have appeared in Chicago newspapers during the last week with reference to Senator Lorimer's bank, the LaSalle Street National. The purpose was to make it appear that other Chicago banks were arraying themselves against the LaSalle Street National and that the Corn Exchange had refused to continue to clear for the Lorimer institution.

With the completion of its first year the officers of LaSalle Street National decided to apply for admission to the clearing house.

This application has been made and will be acted on as soon as the committee is able to meet—probably about the middle of next week. The examiners have this week spent two days going over the accounts of LaSalle Street National and already have their report ready.

The Corn Exchange will continue to clear for the sister bank until the clearing house acts.

It is stated on the word of Senator Lorimer that there is no friction between the banks. He said that the application for membership in the clearing house body simply was in line with the program mapped out by the bank some time ago.

"It is the purpose of this bank to obtain a

Oklahoma Session

The program for the convention of the Oklahoma Bankers Association which will meet in Oklahoma City May 22d and 23d has been made public through W. E. Campbell, secretary of the Oklahoma City chamber of commerce. The session will be called to order Monday morning May 22d at 9:30 o'clock. The first day will have these features: Address of welcome, Prof. A. C. Scott, Oklahoma City; response, George A. Murphy, Muskogee; review of the year's work, President Ferguson; report of the treasurer, J. M. Browning, Oklahoma City; report of the secretary, W. B. Harrison, Enid; reports of group secretaries: Group One, F. W. Smith, Lawton; Two, Joseph Dvorak, Renfrow; Three, C. D. Rorer, Shawnee; Four, G. B. Davis, Claremore; Five, D. A. McKinley, Durant. Address by George B. Harrison, Jr., of Kansas City, Mo., vice-president of the new England National Bank. There will be announcements of committees and adjournment for luncheon. In the afternoon of the first day a feature will be an automobile ride by the lady visitors and entertainment to them at the home of Mrs. F. P. Johnson. In the afternoon the delegates will be guests of the Oklahoma City bankers at a ball game between Oklahoma City and San Antonio teams. That evening there will be theatre parties and other forms of entertainment.

At the session on Tuesday morning the proceedings will be opened by a half hour question box. This will be followed by an address on "The National Reserve Association Plan," by C. W. Allendoerfer, vice-president of the First National Bank of Kansas City. C. J. Grant, auditor of the American Exchange National Bank of Dallas, Texas, will speak on "The Numerical Transit Plan," of which he is the originator. Louis C. Boyle, of Kansas City, will speak on "Bankers' Alliance Fire Insurance." The election of officers of the Oklahoma Bankers Association will end that session.

The Oklahoma State Bankers Association will hold its convention on the afternoon of Tuesday following that of its sister organization. Its session will be short and in addition to the regular business the following addresses will be given: "Protection of Our State Banks," I. H. Makinen, Salisaw; remarks by Governor Cruce; an address by John Schuette, a banker of Manitowoc, Wis., and an address by J. C. McClelland of Oklahoma City. The bank guaranty law will be discussed.

GOOD CROP PROSPECTS

Crops are reported to the Northwestern National by correspondents in such a strain as bring a generalization from J. A. Latta, vice-president, as follows: "Conditions at this time could not be better and they are intrinsically better now than at the same period of last year. There is scarcely a section of the two Dakotas that has not been generously provided with rain and since we received detailed reports about a week ago to that effect, more rain has fallen. Devils Lake had two inches of rain yesterday. The really encouraging feature of the crop conditions is that we are having an absolutely normal spring, in marked contrast to last spring."

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

MEMBERS of Group Two, Indiana, had a hard time side-stepping the meeting which was held at South Bend on Friday. The invitation took the form of a court subpoena signed by Myron Campbell, the chairman, and officially attested by David T. Emery, secretary. Along with this invitation came a self addressed postal card directed to Rome C. Stephenson of the St. Joseph Loan and Trust Company, at South Bend, upon which you were asked to specify the number of representatives which member banks would send. There was a fine luncheon at the Hotel Oliver and a good program.

THE meeting was devoted chiefly to a discussion of the reserve association plan, and member banks were warned that, if they remained away, they would earn an entrance under one of the following classifications: "A grouch," "a back number," or "a stay-at-home." Thus the bank had to make a choice between attending or being listed under one of these subheads. This neat little plot was charged up to Stephenson.

CHAIRMAN B. F. HARRIS of the agricultural committee (Ill.) is working upon his plan for having a banker-farmer congress, one day in advance of the state convention at Springfield. He has gathered some amazing statistics. Replies have been received from 550 bankers located in 53 counties of the state, showing ownership (or representation of ownership) of 790,548 acres of Illinois farm land. About one out of five of these bankers indicated their willingness to serve on committees to help on the work. Under ordinary percentages, these statistics would indicate that at least a million acres of farm land in Illinois are controlled outright by members of the Illinois Bankers Association.

ONE cannot avoid thinking about what a splendid opportunity President Crabtree has afforded Governor Woodrow Wilson to meet the owners of a million acres of Illinois farming lands, who at the same time preside over the destinies of nearly 1,500 banks. Such a meeting is worth while.

C. F. CHILDS AND COMPANY, 29 South LaSalle Street, Chicago, will put you on their mailing list for their investment bulletin if you request it. Mr. Childs is an expert on government bonds, and the circular deals largely with these securities. Whenever a banker is in doubt about whether it will pay him or not to invest in governments and take out additional circulation, he should ask Mr. Childs about it. The information will cost him nothing and will be correct.

BANKERS who attended the Charleston (Ill.) group meeting were greatly amused at the eccentricities of the Charleston Daily News. Here is a sample. In describing the meeting it referred to one of the speakers as "A stall-fed man from Chicago told the people how they could fix the papers on a farmer's land." This was about all they had to say about a most excellent paper read by Mr.

Thompson of the Merchants Loan and Trust Company of this city. Mr. Thompson is a big man physically as well as mentally and an expert on farm mortgages.

THE Daily News' idea of the importance of the meeting consisted in detailing how much the hotel and the butchers got out of it and what the gasoline cost which was burned up in showing the bankers around the town. The editor of this publication seems to be just about as short on ethics as he is in the information which would lead him to recognize a good news item when it happened right in his own town.

HATS off to James B. Forgan! Here is a banker big enough to recognize all that is good in the new national reserve association movement, and at the same time to properly value the "Aldrich Plan" handicap. This paper believes that the movement will attain popularity rapidly if the old pilot can be dropped overboard.

MR. FORGAN truthfully states that every reading man in the country charges up the objectional tariff schedules to the ex-senator from Rhode Island. Westerners have great difficulty in believing anything to be patriotic and honest which comes from his hand. This may at times be unfair to Mr. Aldrich, but it is a fact to be reckoned with nevertheless.

NEXT time you visit Milwaukee on one of the big steel excursion boats, keep your weather eye open for the river frontage of the new Marshall and Ilsley Bank. It is planned that all of the new bank buildings on Water Street in that beautiful city will have colonnaded fronts not only upon the street side, but upon the river side along which it is expected a beautiful promenade will be constructed.

CHICAGO has two rival railroads, the Frisco and the Rock Island, each giving through service to Texas and the Southwest. This should be kept in mind in planning for travel to that wonderful country.

ANOTHER innovation by a Chicago railroad consists in being prepared hereafter, to furnish your meals a la carte at a time set when you buy your ticket and Pullman reservation. When your meal is ready, you will be notified and will not have to stand in line to wait for a scat. Nothing is too good for the railroad traveler of the present day.

FOREMAN BROTHERS BANKING COMPANY of this city has been admitted to membership in the Chicago Clearing House Association, and hereafter will be known as No 27. There are six national banks and twelve state banks at present enjoying membership. These eighteen institutions hereafter will keep their balances in the new vaults being constructed at the Central Trust, and will not transport their balances through the streets in wagons as heretofore.

OKLAHOMA guaranty received another black eye last week when a Guthrie judge granted an injunction restraining the board from interfering in any manner with the Bank of Indian Territory.

THIS bank objects to the payment of any further assessment based upon an impairment of the reserve fund, which it denies. The bank raises the claim that the fund is being used for improper purposes.

THE Burlington railway is not to be behind the other first class lines serving the public from this center. It will erect a one-million dollar office building convenient to its West Side terminal in this city. President Miller has been wise enough to conceal all of this information from the public until he had a title to the necessary property.

NEW JERSEY program announced "gold buttons will be distributed to all registered delegates, 'extra gold' (whatever that is) buttons may be had in the registration room at 25 cents each." We are writing to Charles L. Farrell, at Newark, for a little green light on the subject.

OUT of the twelve members on the program there was one banker (a year out of the public service) the rest being professors, lawyers, public officials and accountants. That wouldn't go out West, where bankers convention means what it says.

THOSE Eastern financial editors who subsist on small advances at home and travel out on due bills never cease to prattle about "the Aldrich plan" and "Cannon for chairman." It oughtn't to hurt the chances of either but there is a danger. Note the innumerable times they have been "going to crucify Farnsworth," to say nothing of Burns. Blind fate must be preserving them for some other end than that of taking a tumble to themselves.

WE presume W. C. Cornwell, editor of "The Bache Review" is out of practice in the praying line, or he would not have directed his supplications, in error, to the supreme court of the United States.

"CLEARINGS Refused to Lorimer's Bank" was the huge head line in the Kohlsaat paper on Monday. Libelous? Most likely, for the clearing house, which is the only power which can refuse clearings, never was mentioned. The Corn Exchange National, the item read, does not wish to continue to represent the LaSalle Street National as clearing agent. One would expect greater honesty from a paper with such a reputation for sound financial news. Too much politics can injure a daily paper quite as much as it can injure a bank. When the public puts a paper on the "unfair list" its influence has departed.

George M. Reynolds in Texas

The distinguished Chicago financier speaks at the Dallas convention upon "Safeguards Against Recurring Panics"

Dallas, Texas, May 16.—Texas bankers were delighted to see the palatial special car roll in, bearing the big Chicago financier, President George M. Reynolds, of the two hundred million dollar Continental and Commercial National. He came to speak upon his intense hobby, the National Reserve Association measure, disguised under the taking title of "safeguards against recurring panics." In his address Mr. Reynolds went over the reserve association plan using the same explanations and arguments, so strongly advanced in his recent booklet. On the subject of preventing recurring panics he said in part:

The rapid development of our country in recent years, bringing under cultivation a constantly increasing area, has caused the scope of our activities to be ever-expanding and more far-reaching.

Success in individual enterprises has made for growth in the volume of our business, and as the volume has increased there has necessarily been an evolution in methods under which business has been conducted, until to-day success requires the application of scientific methods in our undertakings.

Old-time practices and methods have been superseded by modern practices and methods, better calculated to enable the business man to keep pace with the exacting and ever-increasing requirements of the public.

The same rule that governs individual enterprises and those formed through the combined contributions of many individuals toward a common capital, and commonly known as corporations, should apply with equal force to municipalities, commonwealths and nations. The measure of success of these depends upon the promptness with which the evolution of their laws meets the requirements of their civic and business needs.

What are known among business men as practices and methods are known as laws under commonwealths or nations, and, naturally, with the changes in the practices and methods of business, there should be corresponding changes in the laws governing business.

You are all so thoroughly acquainted with what are generally regarded as the weaknesses of our present financial system that it is unnecessary, in view of the short time at my disposal, to do more than to merely mention two or three of them.

The close of the Civil War found a large area of our country devastated and the nation heavily burdened by debt. Every possible recourse had been resorted to in order to raise funds with which to carry on that war, and the paramount thought of the administration at that time was to devise a plan which would maintain the credit of the government and at the same time secure a market for, and the maintenance of, the values of its securities. It was at that time, and under those conditions, our present national banking system came into being.

The plan of using our government bonds as a basis of security for what was destined to be a large part of our circulating medium, served the double purpose of providing what, at that time, in view of the volume of our business, seemed a fair system of currency and at the same time created a ready market for those bonds.

The lack of flexibility in our present nation-of circulation, makes it impossible for us to apply the law of supply and demand to either the money or the credit necessary for the conduct of business, which law should be the basis upon which all operations are predicated.

GEORGE M. REYNOLDS

The fact that our national bank-note circulation of about $700,000,000 is based entirely upon government bonds, which has been sold to the national banks of the country at an inflated value, necessarily prevents the contraction and expansion of those notes to meet the requirements of business. The same can be said of our gold certificates, the issue of which at the present time amounts to a little under one billion dollars and secured one hundred cents on the dollar by gold coin,—to say nothing of our silver certificates of $466,000,000,—are no more flexible than the national bank-notes; for, in the event of the cancellation of any of these certificates, the gold or silver coin which is held by the government as security thereto must be put into circulation.

In addition to this we have in circulation $346,000,000 of what are technically known as United States notes, but which are more generally known to the public as "greenbacks." These are notes of the government issued without any security whatever back of them, being purely fiat in their character, and certainly are no more flexible than the other paper circulation.

The greatest material and industrial development known to the world is that so markedly shown in the United States, and therefore, in order to keep pace with this wonderful development, industrially and commercially, the laws of the nation as well as of the various states, have been constantly changing; but the changes in the laws governing our currency and banking system, which laws of all others are the most important, have been so insignificant that for all practical purposes we are to-day limited to the same facilities which were provided nearly fifty years ago.

In view of our ever-increasing volume of business, it is surprising that we have had so little interruption to it through panics and lack of confidence; and the fact that our present financial system, which is admittedly unscientific and weak in many respects, has served the country so well is due to the marked growth of the use of credit in our business transactions. In other words, if it had been made compulsory to use only actual money in the conduct of our business, it must be clear to all that either there would have arisen the necessity for a material increase in the amount of our circulating medium, or the development of the country and growth in business would have been much less rapid.

The development of a single county in a given state would require only a given amount of money, no matter whether that development were carried on either through the use of money entirely or through the use of both money and credit; but if every county were to be developed at one and the same time, an infinitely greater amount of both money and credit would be required. It is this ambition on the part of our people to develop all sections of the country at the same time, and as rapidly as possible, together with the increased requirements for both money and credit with which to handle our largely increased commerce, which has made it clear to the thinking man that our present financial system is inadequate at times to meet even the reasonable requirements made upon it.

The growth in the percentage of credit used in business to the total volume of business has increased so rapidly that at least 95 per cent of the transactions in the United States are based upon credit.

Since, then, such a large volume of our business is then upon credit, naturally credit becomes one of the most important factors in all economic life. Therefore, our greatest need at this time is the establishment of some central institution given power under enactment of law to provide the credit necessary to meet the reasonable requirements of business, but which at the same time will be safeguarded so as to confine credit within the bounds of a conservative limit.

A credit to be stable must be protected by a proper banking and currency system, and I appear before you to-day to urge that you assist to the extent of your ability in bringing about the enactment of legislation which will provide for the United States a system of currency and banking which under all reasonable circum-stanees will maintain the stability of our credits.

Panics have overtaken us as the result of a multiplicity of causes; principal among which has been our failure to maintain at all times the proper relation between credit and actual money, which must be held to make credits stable.

I maintain that a panic which culminates in the hoarding of money invariably follows the inability of solvent people or concerns to obtain credit when credit is unobtainable, confidence is disturbed and hoarding is resorted to; but the hoarding of money is never the fashion so long as credit can be secured. Inasmuch as the measure of credit which can safely be extended to the public must be in a proper relation to the money held by the banks of the country as a reserve against that credit, the inability of the banks, on account of the lack of flexibility in our currency system, to increase the supply of lawful money reserves beyond a certain point, makes it necessary for them to limit the credit they furnish; consequently, it often happens that banking institutions are unable to furnish during times of stress or pressure the amount of credit necessary for the successful conduct of legitimate business, to say nothing of being annually forced, during the crop moving season, to drain their supply of funds to a point close to the limits of their lawful reserve, in order to meet this requirement.

Under existing conditions, if a planter in Texas needs money with which to mature his crop, or the merchant who markets the crop needs money to move it, it is natural for him to apply to the local banker in his community for the credit thus required. If the relation between that bank's reserve and its liabilities is such that he can increase his liabilities without impairment of his reserve, he makes the loan and places the paper of the applicant in his portfolio. If, however, as often happens during the cotton-moving season, when an abnormal amount of money is necessary for the movement of such crops, his credits are already extended as far as they should be in proportion to his reserve, his ability to discount the note for his customer depends entirely upon his ability to rediscount the same with his correspondent in some reserve city.

Assuming that he is located in one of the smaller cities of Texas, it would be but natural that he should send the note for discount to his correspondent in Dallas or one of the other large cities of Texas; they in turn would credit him in his account for the proceeds of the discount, and if their reserve should be impaired by so doing they would necessarily have to depend upon rediscounting either this note or some other note with their correspondent in some central reserve or other city.

Now, so long as the banks in the three central reserve cities—Chicago, St. Louis and New York—are in a position to receive this paper from their correspondents in Dallas, or elsewhere, and give them credit for the proceeds of same, just that long our machine of commerce works very smoothly.

Under the law of averages, the banks in the three central reserve cities carrying balances from all sections of the country, are more apt to be able to extend credit to their correspondents without outside assistance than are the banks in Dallas, all the correspondents of which are working under exactly the same general conditions. In other words, a condition which makes one of its correspondents need money applies to nearly all of its correspondents, since the same general conditions are likely to prevail throughout the entire state, and in consequence, it experiences, first, a very marked withdrawal of its deposits, and, secondly, a large demand from them for rediscounts or for loans. Whereas, the banks in the three central reserve cities, whose deposits come from all sections of the country, may experience a very large demand for either money or credit from Texas or the South, when conditions in other sections may be easy and the demand light, or vice versa.

Thus, the central-reserve-city bank is able through the interchange of credit to do much to assist its friends throughout the country; but when the conditions are abnormal, as they sometimes are, and the demand upon the central reserve cities for credit or currency comes from all sections of the country at the same time, they are unable to meet even the reasonable requirements of their friends, for the reason that under our existing national banking system, there is no source to which they can turn for assistance through the rediscounting of their paper securities, or otherwise. When this condition obtains they are obliged to acknowledge their inability to further expand their loans. Under these circumstances confidence is disturbed, and fear, displacing reason, prompts a desire to hoard money. When this desire overtakes the people, and the banks are called upon to pay out abnormal amounts of money, we find ourselves in the midst of a panic.

This is exactly the condition that prevailed in 1907, and that panic, memorable because of the fact that practically all of the banking institutions throughout the entire country suspended specie payment at the same time, caused those high in the official circles of our government to come to a realization of the pressing need of at least some modification in our currency system.

Mr. Reynolds then took up the National Reserve Association measure as proposed by the National Monetary Commission and amended and endorsed by the monetary commission of the American Bankers Association, and further approved by the executive council on J. B. Forgan's report at Nashville.

GROUP SYSTEM STARTED IN IDAHO

Idaho bankers, like those of Illinois, decided not to wait upon formal action by the state association, and went ahead and organized Group One, at Boise. E. F. Larson, Citizens Bank of Nampa, was made chairman. Mr. Larson formerly was a banker at Britt, Iowa. Fifty bankers attended the first meeting and a second group is to be organized. This reminds one of the first Illinois group at Moline and the second at Peoria.

FARMERS & MECHANICS NATIONAL OF FORT WORTH

The Farmers & Mechanics National of Fort Worth has been devoting a great share of its attention to out of town bank accounts. It had a number of active workers to represent it at the Dallas convention, and has announced that it will be glad to correspond with those who may be contemplating the opening of new accounts, or who may be wishing to make changes in their connections. The Farmers & Mechanics has a large list of correspondents already, well distributed over the state, and consequently has collection facilities which are unexcelled. The bank has a capital and surplus of $600,000, which is ample for every condition of conservative banking. J. W. Spencer is president, J. T. Pemberton and Ben O. Smith are vice-presidents. B. H. Martin is cashier and his assistant is G. P. Stewart.

NEW BANK AT AMBIA, IND.

Farmers and Merchants State Bank, of Ambia, Ind., opened for business May 1st. It will use the room formerly occupied by the private bank of Williams, Goodwine, and Company, and a new vault will be built for them. Ambia is a good town just over the state line east of Hoopston and is surrounded by as good land as there is in the Central West. Thirty of the solid farmers of the vicinity are stockholders of the new bank which will have capital of $25,000. Ambia has one bank already, the First National, which bought out the business of Williams, Goodwine, and Company, but like other good villages of about 800 inhabitants, it seems that two banks are inevitable.

AMERICAN NATIONAL OF PARIS, TEXAS

Conspicuous among the successful banks of the Lone Star State must be mentioned the American National Bank of Paris. It was established in January, 1907, and opened for business the middle of the following month with a capital of $150,000 and no surplus. The bank itself is the only new thing about the organization. J. F. McReynolds, the president, has been engaged in the banking business in Paris for twenty-four years. W. T. Ridley, the cashier, has had nineteen years of experience, and vice-president W. R. Wood, seventeen years. These three officials, owing to their long experience and practical methods, have in four years built up their institution where they can show a surplus and undivided profits of sixty thousands and more than a million in deposits. Not anything could speak in higher terms of the ability of these bankers nor of the prosperity in that part of the state in which the bank is located. The bank was represented at the Dallas convention, and the showing made in its March 7th statement to the comptroller was favorably commented upon.

BANK ROBBED FOR THIRD TIME

The private bank of Alexander Pate of Wellington, Iroquois county, was visited by yeggmen a few nights ago for the third time in a decade. The robbers blew the safe door with nitro-glycerine and so great was the force of the three explosions that the safe was entirely ruined and the bank furniture was overturned. Over $3,000 in cash was secured, all that the bank had except $4, but the books were left intact. The yeggmen who robbed the bank the first time served a term in the state prison but the second robber was never found.

NEW BANKS IN ILLINOIS

Among the banks recently organized in Illinois are: Farmers State Bank, Stonington; Rochester State Bank, Rochester; Peoples State Bank, Newton.

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED

ILLINOIS BANKING NEWS

By C. C. Burford

Corn planting is practically ended and only those farmers who are "late" will have much planting to do during the coming week. The ground has not been always in the best condition as dry weather prevailed following the 9th of May and many farmers found that their fields were extremely "cloddy." The weather was well fitted in general for planting. Grass has been good but was somewhat shortened by the dry hot weather. The season for poultry and the great mortgage lifter, the hog, has been an extremely good one and gardens and truck patches have been doing well. Horses are quoted somewhat lower and so are milch cows.

Some of the best judges of fruit conditions believe that this crop is safe so far and if the next week or ten days can be passed without a late May frost the prospects are that the fruit will be "safe." The place which an abundance of cheap fruit takes in the economy of living can hardly be overestimated. The growth of fruit, garden, poultry, and dairy products by the farmer and the man in country villages as an item which goes far toward reducing their cost of living as compared to those in city environment.

Bankers Learn of Better Farming

Group Six bankers who attended the annual group meeting at Charleston, May 10th, are unanimous in the praise of Dr. E. E. Taylor of Moline who spoke on the subject of "Better Farming." One banker said that the address was the best and most sensible agricultural address to which he had ever listened. Dr. Taylor handled his subject in a most able way and he could have had no more appreciative audience than the bankers of the rich farming counties of Group Six who heard him at Charleston.

Chicago bankers on the program were William G. Edens of Central Trust, Frederick W. Thompson of Merchants Loan and Trust, and Secretary Crampton of the Illinois Bankers Association. Rotation in office is observed in Group Six. Vice-Chairman George W. Telling cashier of the Commercial Trust and Savings of Danville, becomes chairman, John M. Glassco, cashier of the Charleston State Bank is the new vice-chairman, while G. R. Helm, of Bragg, Helm, and Company of Tuscola is the new secretary and treasurer. The place for the next meeting was undecided but it will probably be either at Tuscola or at Mattoon.

More Postal Banks Designated

Canton and Belleville have each been designated as locations for new postal savings banks by Postmaster-General Hitchcock. These offices with those at Pekin and LaSalle gives Illinois four offices. Red Oak, Iowa, and Sullivan, Indiana, have also been selected.

Bank Robber Found Guilty

George Reed, alias "J. Miller" was found guilty at Monmouth of robbing the bank at Swan Creek, near that city, on the night of January 30th last. Reed was arrested at Monmouth the day after the robbery but escaped jail March 18th, and was recaptured at Nelson, Nebraska, a month later.

New Building on Old Site

Reisch Brothers of Springfield will erect this season a thoroughly modern eight-story office and commercial building on the site of the old Ridgely National Bank. The Ridgely bank corner is a historic spot in the city of Springfield.

John P. Frenzel, Jr.

The Merchants National of Indianapolis, one of the leading financial institutions of the Hoosier state, never overlooks an opportunity to care for their customers or take on other desirable accounts. Assistant Cashier John P. Frenzel, Jr., was on hand at the Charleston, (Ill.) group meeting to see their customers and to answer any inquiries of the Illinois bankers about Indianapolis banking facilities. Mr. Frenzel always is welcome at Illinois meetings.

Texas Banking Conditions

Address of W. H. Fuqua, President of the Association, at the Dallas convention, May 16th

The business affairs of the state generally are in excellent condition, although we have just passed through one of the worst drouths the state has ever experienced, the condition of the banks was never sounder or more satisfactory, as a whole, or the prospects for the future brighter.

Our state has undergone a wonderful transition in the past twenty-five years, and though the change has been gradual, it has been far reaching in its effects, and has added to our wealth and resources multiplied millions. I refer to the change from a live stock to a farming country. Our large ranches are waning and while the live stock industry is, and will always continue to be, one of the leading factors in our prosperity and wealth, we must look to the farmer more and more for a large part of our business. While we must depend upon all of our customers and give their needs due consideration, it is the soil that is the basis of wealth, and it takes the aid of capital to improve farms, build public highways and make farm life profitable and attractive.

While the past year has not produced full activity in business, nor returns on capital entirely commensurate with investments, still labor has been fully employed at remunerative wages and smiling plenty has everywhere rewarded the frugal and industrious. The financial sky shows a clearing in all directions that gives promise of a brighter day. Hope so long deferred, since the panic a few years ago, now begins to be hope realized, and enterprise and progress begins to appear on every hand. The possibilities of the opening opportunities that surround us to-day, are quite beyond the powers of the finest imaginations to conceive.

I refer with much pride to the measure of integrity which has marked the management of our financial institutions. During the past twelve months, we have not had any failures of consequence, either in banking or commercial circles, and while the crops over the state have not been up to an average in yield, the prices paid for the products have been proportionately larger, so on the whole the returns have been highly satisfactory.

Our population for the past ten years has shown a most wonderful increase, our industries and manufacturing in all lines have developed on every hand, and our mines have been increasing and yielding treasures most bountifully, good rains have been general all over the state during the past few months, and while there are always possible unfavorable contingencies to be reckoned with, still our prosperity to-day seems to be well laid and gives confidence for the future; there is a solid foundation on which to plan the season's trade and commerce.

While there are some questions vitally affecting the financial and commercial interests of the country generally yet to be settled, and business is hesitating in the face of tariff revision and final settlement of the Sherman anti-trust act suits, still the large credits available at the banking centers give every assurance that the situation is well and amply provided for in advance, and even though some business unsettlement may be expected, we can depend upon those charged with these affairs so to handle them as to eventually encourage business enterprise. Coupled with this is the general disposition the country over to slow down and to avoid speculation and reckless risks of all kinds, a policy which was so freely advocated by the wise ones during the latter part of our recent prosperity boom. Our people are impulsive and at times led away by the chimera of a prosperity that never ends, but they easily learn their lesson when the occasion arises, and have now settled down to the hard-pan basis of hard work, which fully brings out the saving power of the American people and will result in the saving of fabulous sums. We are not buying the expensive automobiles of the past few years, nor living as expensively in other ways as we did then, and all of these things are going to count enormously in the ultimate prosperity of our people, and the getting back to a safe and sound business basis. The country is going through a transition stage at this moment, but we are laying the foundation for genuine prosperity later on. At this time wages are practically the only thing that has not taken the downward trend, and may not the solution here come through greater efficiency, rather than an actual reduction? Labor can work out this problem for itself by improving its mental attitude. Efficiency is the final test of all service. By attention and concentration, labor can produce far better results, and increased skill always commands better wages.

While there is little reason for pessimism, still the fact that we as a nation can not provide funds for our securities at a time when money is easy and accumulating at money centers, is a matter of some concern. Market reports indicate that big consignments of our stocks are weekly going to European investors. This indicates that we are still heavy borrowers, and while this, of itself, is no cause for undue alarm, still interest charges must be met, and there is a limit to the absorbent power of our nation, and while we cannot have too much capital in view of the fact that we are developing so rapidly, there is a point at which this ceases to be safe. There is danger inherent in the foreign ownership of public utilities, a danger not so apparent to us as to countries less capable of defending themselves in time of war.

Bank Examinations

The examination of banks has been brought to the attention of the bankers more forcibly in the past year or so than ever before by reason of the fact of many meritorious innovations in the manner and method of the work, and a growing disposition on the part of both the national and state departments and their examiners to work in unison to the common good of all interests represented. In the past much blame has been attached to these departments, and the examiners for not being as thorough in examinations as they should be. This blame does not rest wholly with the departments, but is largely attributable to the lawmakers. The greatest difficulty is there are not enough examiners to do the work properly and they are not paid in proportion to the ability required for the work. The national department has recently put into practice a great many needed reforms and too much importance can not be attached to the results striven for, or the broad manner in which time honored trivial matters, which were formerly given much time and space in reports to the authorities, are left to the examiner at the time of his examination and thus weeded out and handled in a simple business way, while matters of greater importance are given more serious consideration, much to the improvement of the service rendered and to the benefit of the interests of the bank and its depositors. You gentlemen are familiar with these matters and it is not necessary for me to go into detail. The present way of paying bank examiners is all wrong, and we should go on record and work energetically against the method of paying examiners according to the number of banks they examine. They must have time to ascertain the true condition of the banks and not be forced to hurry away before their work is done; they should be salaried like any other important officer of the government and paid according to the service they render and the ability they employ. The national banks are paying annually in tax on circulation more than the expenses of the comptroller's department. Why not use this excess to improve the service?

Postal Savings Banks

Since our last meeting the postal savings bank has passed from a theory and untried experiment to an actual working factor in our monetary affairs, and so far the results have verified the acute foresight of my worthy predecessor. He assured you last year that if the bill became a law it would not appreciably affect Texas banks, and the reports from Washington on the working of this plan fully corroborate his predictions. The results of the postal savings bank at Port Arthur for April showed a total of 38 depositors, with an aggregate deposit of $1,017.00. The last report from the postal department at Washington, under date of a few days ago, indicate that forty-five depositors since May 1st, show four hundred accounts received, aggregating $10,000 in deposits, and that additional postal savings banks will be designated until the system has been established throughout the United States.

The authorities seem to have analyzed the situation closely and find that practically all the deposits have come from hiding and there seems no disposition to withdraw funds from banks to place with the postal savings banks. However, should a tendency of this kind develop in some sections, it will be a long time until Texas bankers will have anything to apprehend from this source. The reason of this is, that almost anyone with a desire to place

NEWS LETTER By Mortimer I. Stevens

WISCONSIN

Taking the bank clearings of Milwaukee during the past week as evidence business is about normal in the different lines for this time of the year and will compare favorably with the same period one year ago. Manufacturers report some falling off in orders though they also claim that there is every indication of a good fall trade.

The recent decision by the supreme court concerning the Standard Oil Company has been the topic of conversation during the week and while many were of the opinion that the decision would have at least a temporary effect upon the financial situation it seems to have cleared the atmosphere and a revival of trade is anticipated.

Marshall and Ilsley Lease

The formal lease on the new Marshall and Ilsley bank property on East Water Street has been filed in the office of the register of deeds. The lease is for ninety-nine years and is dated August 17, 1910. For the first ten years the yearly rental paid by the bank will be $7,000. The second ten years the yearly rental will be $8,000, and beginning May 1, 1931, the yearly rental will be 4 per cent of the appraised value of the demised land without improvements, the amount not to be less than $8,000, nor more than $9,000, to be paid in the standard gold coin of the United States, in four equal quarterly payments on June 15th, September 15th, December 15th and March 15th of each year.

The new building will be 60x150 feet and four stories high. It will be absolutely fireproof throughout, including the furniture which will all be of steel. The walls and basement will be of twenty-six inch concrete and the upper stories of brick. The architectural style of the building will be Ionic. Two massive pillars of solid stone, each 56 feet high and 5 feet 8 inches in diameter will stand on either side of the front entrance which will be constructed of bronze.

The main banking room on the first floor will be 100 feet long, 55 feet wide and 36 feet high, thus giving to Milwaukee the largest banking room in the entire state. The floor will be of marble with all counters of the same material. The color scheme will be light buff, the color of the Botticello marble with which the interior is finished. All cage work and grills will be of bronze.

Attack Guaranty Bill

Addresses by M. J. Cleary of Blanchardville and Platt Whitman of Highland, in opposition to the proposed guaranty of bank deposits bill, were the main features of the seventh annual banquet of Group Two, of the Wisconsin Bankers Association held recently at Madison with 130 bankers from the southern part of the state in attendance.

The delegates were welcomed to the city by J. M. Boyd after the meeting had been called to order by President C. R. Thompson of Richland Center, who later delivered his annual address. J. J. Jamieson responded to the annual address of welcome. After Secretary Milo C. Hagan had made his report short addresses were made by George D. Bartlett and Louis Quarles of Milwaukee.

It was decided to hold the next annual meeting at Madison. The following officers were elected: President, J. J. Jamieson, Shullsburg; vice-president, W. H. Pierstorff, Middleton; secretary and treasurer, Milo C. Hagan, Madison; members of executive committee, C. R. Thompson of Richland Center and J. H. Durst of Monroe; delegate to the state convention, C. R. Thompson, Richland Center.

Among the Milwaukee delegates present were: E. J. Hughes, assistant cashier, First National Bank; H. Williams, cashier, Marine National Bank; William M. Post, cashier, National Exchange Bank; W. L. Cheney, assistant cashier, Wisconsin National Bank; Henry C. Quarles, Wisconsin Trust Company, and George D. Bartlett, secretary of the association.

State Insurance Commissioner H. L. Ekern, who spoke on the subject of mutual insurance affecting banks said it would not be necessary to pass a deposit guaranty law if the bankers would get together and agree to help any bank in temporary distress. Senator George E. Scott, who, as a member of the senate committee on corporations, has been considering the Owen guaranty deposit bill, approved the suggestion, and said that if some satisfactory solution of the problem were not worked out by the bankers a guaranty deposit law was bound to come. Former Assemblyman M. J. Cleary, former Assemblyman Platt Whitman, Prof. W. A. Scott, of the State University and others

Another New Milwaukee Bank

The northwest side of Milwaukee is to have a new savings bank. This was made public on Tuesday of last week when State Banking Commissioner A. E. Kuolt approved the incorporation of the Wisconsin State Savings Bank of Milwaukee with a capital stock of $50,000. The incorporators are T. C. Esser, Gottlieb Wirth and Dr. William Heitmann.

"Although plans have not yet been completed for the new building which we will erect," said Mr. Esser, "we have a site selected and shall commence work on the structure in the near future. We expect to open the bank in the early fall and shall make a special effort to cater to the residents and merchants of the northwest side of Milwaukee."

Wisconsin Banking Notes

John J. Sherman, cashier of the Citizens National Bank of Appleton, has returned from a trip to the South during which he attended the meeting of the executive council of the American Bankers Association at Nashville. He reports business in the southern states as quite brisk, the demand for money strong and rates remunerative.

Articles of incorporation have been issued for a new state bank at New London to be called the Farmers State Bank. The capital will be $25,000. The incorporators are Giles H. Purnam, Jacob Werner and John Jennings.

O. W. Sprecher, who was instrumental in founding the Farmers State Bank of Norwalk and who has held the position of cashier since its organization three years ago has resigned and will be succeeded by M. O. Heffernan who has been principal of the Norwalk schools for several years.

State Banking Commissioner Kuolt has issued a charter to the Bank of Somerset with a capital of $10,000. S. Parnell is president and H. A. Lagranuer, cashier.

A state bank was recently organized at Patch Grove. The officers are: President, Fred Booth; cashier, R. F. Loftus.

The First National Bank of Milwaukee has accomplished the increase of its capitalization from $2,000,000 to $2,500,000 as authorized at the annual meeting of the stockholders on February 21st. All the stock of the First Saving and Trust Company is now owned by the stockholders of the First National Bank. A special dividend is to be declared out of the undivided profits and the stock will then be held by trustees for the benefit of the stockholders of the bank. The present directors of the First National Bank become directors in the trust company.

The directors of the Bank of Sun Prairie at their recent annual meeting declared a dividend of 13 per cent. The large dividend of the bank is chiefly owing to its careful and conservative management and its having no losses during the past year. At a meeting of the stockholders of the Bank of Tomah the capital stock of the bank was raised to $25,000 with a surplus of $5,000.

The stockholders of the West Side Bank, Milwaukee, have recently voted to increase the capital stock of the bank $100,000, making the total capitalization $200,000. Ninety-seven per cent of the stock was represented at the meeting. It also was decided that every stockholder should have the right to subscribe to an amount of the new capital equal to that he now holds.

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, May 18.—Outside of a further slight improvement in the demand for funds from the Southwest, the week developed absolutely nothing new in the monetary situation here. Bankers are pretty unanimous in the opinion that nothing like a revival may be looked for before the end of August. The local commercial demand is routine in character, being in all respects seasonable, and relative to the rather quiet conditions in all commercial lines. Wants of brokers were a shade broader, but not sufficiently so to cause any quotable change in the rates prevailing. Leading banks report ample funds and heavy reserves with deposits holding their own exceptionally well for this season of the year. Collections, both city and country, are reported as being for the most part satisfactory. Country merchants are meeting their obligations promptly, which is taken as an excellent indication of the basically strong conditions existing in this region. A factor of hopefulness is the continued brilliant crop outlook.

Enormous Gathering Expected

Secretary W. F. Keyser, secretary of the Missouri Bankers Association, says that acceptances and advices from all over the state, indicate that the convention of Missouri bankers at Kansas City next week will be the largest in the history of the association. Important matters which are to be taken up are attracting many members, while others are taking advantage of the meeting to look Kansas City over, and enjoy the festivities, which promise to be a card. The railroads have granted an open rate of 2 cents a mile in either direction from points in Missouri to Kansas City and return. Mr. Keyser, in his circular, urges that all delegates attend all sessions and remain throughout. The sessions will be dismissed promptly on schedule time, giving ample time for social features, without conflicting with the business part of the convention. Mr. Keyser says that it is too often true that only a few remain for the election and installation of officers. This is always an interesting feature, and he hopes a large attendance will welcome and encourage the incoming officers when they are installed. The Kansas City bankers intimate that they intend to whoop things up in the entertainment line.

Wagner Electric Increase

The Wagner Electric Manufacturing Company, one of the most important industrial concerns of this city, has announced that it will increase its capital stock to $1,500,000. The additional capital, $300,000, will be devoted to trade expansion, but it is also likely that the plant will be enlarged. The plan is to issue the stock to the shareholders at par. Payments are being made now, but the scrip will not be formally issued until October. St. Louis has made signal gains during the past few years in the manufacture of electrical machinery, apparatus and supplies. The Wagner company was one of the pioneers in the field, was financed entirely by local capital and is almost entirely owned in St. Louis.

ST PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

The South Side State Bank at its first meeting in a new banking house voted to increase capital to $150,000 and to keep $50,000 in the surplus. O. Erling Olsen and H. F. Rosing, assistant cashiers, were elected directors. Other directors are F. E. Kenaston, president; A. M. Woodward, vice-president; A. A. McRae, cashier; P. Olsen Earl, John Lind, Hasn Simonson, E. A. Woodward, and J. D. Holtzermann, who died this week in Italy. The bank building has a stucco finish, a mahogany finished entrance with white marble trimming. Georgia marble rose tinted forms the walls, and the pillars are of Grecian marble.

Blake Brothers of Boston have refused the issue of $150,000 Minneapolis park bonds whose attorneys hold that the 1909 law supersedes the 1907 law under which the bonds were issued. Under both laws the board could issue only $350,000, the attorneys say, which amount has been reached previous to the proposed $150,000 issue. The park board attorney is asked to give an opinion.

Frank Corey of Fort Dodge, Iowa; John Knecht of Colome, S. D.; W. S. Ayers and Orville Bowersox of Dallas, S. D., have bought the Bi-metallic Bank of Colome from L. W. Marley and Charles Marley. Mr. Corey was elected president, John Knecht the vice-president, and Orville Bowersox cashier.

The State Bank of Halma, Minn., has incorporated at $10,000. Incorporators are L. C. Simons of St. Paul, R. G. Tweeton of Barnesville, Minn.; Albert Bachum, Ole Folland, J. O. Folland, T. L. Spied, H. H. Moen, John Holen and Alfred Anderson of Halma.

C. W. Rowley has been appointed superintendent of the Winnipeg branch of the Bank of Commerce.

The St. Paul assembly has voted to authorize the water board to issue $100,000 additional bonds. The ordinance must pass the board of aldermen.

Instead of accepting a renewal of the offer of the First National Bank of $100 a semester for the best writing in Minneapolis schools, in existence two years, the supervisor is making a big exhibit of commercial and other writing. The supervisor felt that with the bank prizes the pupils slighted other work in the schools.

First district bankers in Minnesota will meet June 5th and 6th at Winona. A river excursion will be given the first night. An interesting address will be made by C. B. Hazelwood of the Union Trust Company, Chicago, on "Bank Advertising," Tuesday morning. The entertainment committee is A. Temm, S. A. Steffen and W. H. Mahl.

Early group meetings of the Minnesota Bankers Association were May 16th at Hastings, Group Three; and May 18th at Montevideo, Group Seven. Among those attending were Stanley Bezoier, assistant cashier of the Security National; P. G. Leeman, assistant cashier First National, Minneapolis; and R. E. Macgregor, assistant cashier of the Northwestern National.

Pike will be served attendants at the Minnesota Bankers Association dinner June 21st at Bemidji. Convention speakers will be Dr. G. E. Vincent, president of the state university; Former Congressman J. A. Tawney of Winona; The dinner will be served on the bank of Lake Bemidji. Bankers from the East will leave Minneapolis the night of June 20th. In the morning they will be taken for an automobile ride and for a launch ride on the lake. The business session will be at 11 A. M. An entertainment will follow the dinner. The addresses will be delivered in the evening. A moonlight ride on the lake will follow and a visit to the saw mills. At 2 A. M. the following day a start will be made by special train for International Falls where the paper making plant of the Minnesota & Ontario Power Company will be inspected. The Bemidji entertainment committee consists of W. L. Brooks, Northern National Bank; R. H. Schumaker, First National Bank; H. C. Baer, Security State Bank, assisted by G. D. La Bar of the First National Bank of Brainerd, and H. L. Wood, a banker at Warren.

CANDIDATE FOR ILLINOIS TREASURERSHIP

The friends of David A. Wyckoff, cashier of the First Trust and Savings, Alton, have suggested his name as a possible candidate for treasurer of the Illinois Bankers Association. The historians of the society fail to find where Alton ever has held any executive office in the history of the organization. Mr. Wyckoff is an active and influential member of the society, has had good banking experience, having been cashier of the Alton Banking and Trust Company for a number of years before the establishment of the First Trust and Savings. His name being the first one to be announced in this connection it is a good bet that his friends will make a good showing for him.

W. G. Edens who has been mentioned for the place is said to have declined to consider it and to have spoken favorably for Mr. Wyckoff.

WILL HEAR NOTED BANKERS

Nashville, Tenn., May 18.—The Tennessee Bankers Association will meet in this city May 29th and 30th in annual convention, the Aldrich plan being the principal topic for discussion. At least 600 persons are expected to attend from over the state. Hon. John Perrin, of the Fletcher American National Bank of Indianapolis, will deliver an address on "The Aldrich Plan for Monetary Legislation." William Livingston, of Detroit, will speak on the "American Bankers Association."

The convention will be called by D. M. Armstrong, president, cashier of the Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, of Memphis. Hon. Ben W. Hooper, Governor of Tennessee, will deliver the address of welcome. The Nashville Clearing House will arrange several entertainment features.

THE OPENING BATTLE NEXT WEEK

The opening battle for the National Reserve Association plan will come off in Chicago next week. D. R. Forgan will preside at the Wednesday luncheon of the Ways and Means Commission of the Chicago Association of Commerce, and George M. Reynolds will talk. At the LaSalle Hotel.

OFF FOR EUROPEAN TOUR

George F. Orde and E. C. Cooke, Minneapolis bankers, are on the way to Europe for a couple of months' recreation.

BUYS OLD FAIR GROUND SITE

J. W. Crabb, president of the Tazewell County National of Delavan, has bid off at public auction the fair grounds of the old Tazewell County Agricultural Association of Delavan. Mr. Crabb held a mortgage against the association for $6,375. This action will probably terminate the "fair" at Delavan which has been held annually since 1879. The passing of the "county fair" in Illinois is an interesting phenomenon and before many years most of them will have closed their affairs. Many of them degenerated into mere racing contests and the agricultural interests were lost sight of in the display of sport. Many bankers can tell interesting stories of aiding in handling gate receipt money at these old-time fairs and in keeping fair officials, stand-keepers and fakirs supplied with change.

HOW WE LOST A CUSTOMER

The Woodruff Safe Deposit Company of Joliet has sent out a neatly bound booklet of some pretensions as to cover and design, entitled "How We Lost a Customer." Inside, bound in heavy mourning rules, are the two words, in large type, "He Died."

CENTRAL WEST LETTER

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

Omaha

If there is any financial uneasiness in other quarters it is not felt by Drovers' National of the Kansas City Stock Yards. At least that is the expression of H. L. Jarboe, Jr., president of the Drovers' who has good reason to feel enthusiastic over the outlook. When Drovers' National Bank of the Kansas City Stock Yards was reorganized January 10, 1911, there was brought to it strong financial and packing interests that gave assurance of rapid growth. At that time Mr. Jarboe, Jr., became its president. The success that this bank met was astonishing even to those most familiar with conditions. On May 10th, just four months after the reorganization an accounting was made which showed that the deposits had increased from half a million dollars to one and a quarter millions and the daily record shows that this increase is keeping up.

At the May 10th meeting of the directors of the Drovers' National Bank of the Kansas City Stock Yards, J. M. Hellings, Jr., was elected cashier. Mr. Hellings is only 30 years of age but he has had valuable experience in the banking business, having been cashier of the Coats State Bank of Coats, Kan., and president of the Citizens State Bank of Pratt, Kan. I. E. Gaskill, formerly assistant cashier of the Oklahoma National Bank of Chickasha, Okla., was elected assistant cashier of the Drovers' National. The other officers are: H. L. Jarboe, Jr., president and Charles E. Waite, vice-president.

Professional Organizing

In order to stop the practice of organizing banks for the sole purpose of selling stock and affording positions for the promoters at good salaries, or to sell the franchise and organizing competing banks at a profit, J. N. Dolley, state bank commissioner of Kansas will enforce some stringent measures. "Before granting permission to organize a state bank," says Mr. Dolley, "satisfactory evidence of the need of such an institution in the locality must be furnished the department. When this is done it must be shown that no salaries, commissions, perquisites or compensations of any kind have been paid or will be paid for the expense of organization, soliciting sale of stock, services rendered or promotion of any kind or character."

Southwestern Miscellany

Secretary Royse of the Nebraska state banking board has construed the section of the bank guaranty law relating to bonds for employees of banks as discretionary and not mandatory. He has received many letters from bankers indicating that bond and surety companies have stated that employees must furnish bonds. Whenever bonds are written they must be filed with the secretary of the state banking board of Nebraska.

The Miami State Bank of Miami, Okla., has filed application for nationalization. The new bank will be known as the Ottawa County National Bank and will have a capital of $50,000 and surplus of $10,000.

J. D. Lankford, state bank commissioner of Oklahoma, has followed the example of Commissioner Dolley of Kansas, in establishing a bureau for giving information as to the financial standing of companies whose stock is offered for sale in Oklahoma.

W. H. Seeger, who has been associated with various Kansas City banks for forty years, and who is now one of the vice-presidents of the National Bank of Commerce, has resigned and will take a long vacation. No man in Kansas City is better known than Mr. Seeger. As a boy he went to work in the bank of J. Q. Watkins and Company. When that bank was absorbed by the National Bank of Kansas City he went with that concern, remaining there until 1882 when he was one of the organizers of the Citizens National Bank which was merged into the Union National in 1898. The Union National was bought by the National Bank of Commerce in 1908 and Mr. Seeger became one of its vice-presidents. Mr. Seeger's resignation will take effect July 1st.

W. H. Phillips, former cashier of the First National Bank of Vinita, Okla., has been found guilty of falsifying a bank statement. He will appeal.

J. R. Dominick, president of the Traders National Bank of Kansas City, has been on an extended business trip through the South.

GROUP FOUR, ILLINOIS

Group Four, Illinois, will meet in Evanston (Patten Gymnasium) on June 29th with a "home talent" program. There will be a luncheon and a sight seeing trip in autos.

That the California Safe Deposit and Trust Company will reopen its doors on July 1st is the expectation of the local depositors' committee, based upon reports from New York that the work of reorganization had been completed there and financial backing assured. The law firm of Joline, Larkin & Rathbone of New York authorized a statement that plans for the reopening of the institution had been completed.

his savings can get a better rate of interest from his bank and other sources in the state. Furthermore, the banks generally are encouraging this class of depositors and carrying on a campaign of advertising and getting in closer touch all the time with the small producer and wage earner. As the right kind of confidence displayed by the banker begets confidence, the people as a whole are growing to look with increasing confidence on the banks and coming to recognize them as a most useful factor in the upbuilding of their communities, and necessarily worthy of their confidence and patronage.

The Usefulness and Opportunity of the Banker

I am speaking this moment to a body of men who represent and control more available wealth and capital perhaps than any organization that ever met on Texas soil. We meet here at an hour when the thought of the American people is in a ferment over the problems connected with the wise regulation of moneyed institutions. We are a part of the life of the American Democracy of States. It is our privilege and our duty to contribute to the just solution of these problems, which have, we may frankly admit, produced widespread disquietude in the public mind. I have an abiding faith in the ultimate wisdom and justice of the American people. I believe with that eminent scholar and profound publicist, Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey, that wealth does not create public distrust or public jealousy; that the masses of men in this country honor in their fellows that large economic power that enables them to acquire wealth in a legitimate way, and use it in the way of large service. To relieve the tension of the public thought upon this question, we have simply to convince our fellow citizens that organized wealth does not mean a selfish combination of power for private gain at the expense of the public good; that large aggregations of wealth exist because the vast enterprises called forth by our unparalleled economic conditions and opportunities demand them; that behind these great capitalistic institutions lies the need for the service which they alone can render; that their purpose is constructive and not destructive; that the changed conditions which have called them into being are world-wide and resistless as the ocean floods; that they can be used without being abused; that rightly used they can and will contribute immensely to the larger life that is upon us; that the duty of the hour is to adjust ourselves to this oncoming larger economic life instead of trying to resist it. What we need in our public life is a broad constructive statesmanship with large powers of initiative, capable of grasping the full force of the great dissolution of old conditions and the breaking of the new day. We need now as we never needed before in our public life men who can direct us in the great task before us of bringing forward all that is best and most enduring in our past ideals and conditions and organizing them into the larger ideas and broader principles demanded by the present hour. Thus we shall build together our glorious past and our greater future, and the wealth of our country shall stand with beneficent rather than selfish ends as the star of its hope and purpose and grandly lead the happy millions of our countrymen to the realization of a worthier and better and larger life in that new and brighter and greater day for ourselves and for the world whose dawning even now begins to adorn the eastern horizon.

Association, Prosperity, Etc.

The association has prospered during the year just passed. There has been a satisfactory increase of membership. Few, if any, have allowed their membership to lapse. Our treasurer's report shows a strong condition, and in fact, the business of the association is in a flattering state of prosperity.

Full reports of the work of the various committees will be submitted, and I think the results of their labors worthy of much consideration and due appreciation.

I want to thank each and every member of the different committees for the efficient and faithful service rendered whenever and wherever called upon, and I desire especially, to thank our capable and worthy secretary for his able and untiring co-operation upon all occasions.

The group meetings have become a most useful and pleasant feature of the machinery of the association and are productive of great good that could not otherwise be accomplished. Some few have been disposed to shrug their shoulders and say these meetings are only an excuse for a junket. No intelligent man can attend these meetings, experience the feeling of good fellowship they generate and enjoy the uplift they give without realizing that they are important and wholesome factors in achieving the great work designed by the organizers of this association, and so gloriously carried out during its twenty odd years of expanding growth and usefulness.

Editorial Comment

FAITHFULNESS OF DIRECTORS

The New Jersey convention had a treat in a splendid paper by Edward T. Perine, a famous professional accountant and banker combined. Mr. Perine is a vice-president of the Windsor Trust, New York, and for a time was deputy comptroller of the state of New York. One of his hobbies, naturally, is thorough supervision by examination under the strict rules of scientific accountancy. His topic touched upon some standards for examination of banks by directors. He made it pretty plain that there is no lack of warrant by law, for directors to keep posted, neither has the law been lax with negligent officials. Mr. Perine quoted the famous decision by the late Chief Justice Fuller in support of his own position of accountability by directors. The Fuller decision reads:

"We hold that directors must exercise ordinary care and prudence in the administration of the affairs of the bank, and that this includes something more than officiating as figureheads. They are entitled under the law to commit the banking business, as defined, to their duly authorized officers, but this does not absolve them from the duty of reasonable supervision, nor ought they be permitted to be shielded from liability because of want of knowledge of wrong doing if that ignorance is the result of gross inattention."

It was shown that the New York state law is very explicit and the instructions of the state banking department very clear. Yet the Carnegie episode and others of recent occurrence shows something to be wrong. Mr. Perine points out one weakness of the situation. "As a professional accountant, I have been present at a great many different directors' examinations, not only in New Jersey and New York, but in other states. At such times it has often seemed to me that the committee must have been chosen from among what might be called 'old hands at the business,' rather than according to the principle of rotation in appointments. Again it has sometimes seemed as though the officers of an institution, while outwardly attentive and disposed to grant reasonable facilities to a committee, are in reality more or less bored by the committee's presence. There is a feeling, not always fully concealed, that the deliberate gentlemen who have come to visit the bank are to be tolerated, rather than helped to the utmost in their unaccustomed task. There is too often a willingness either to 'get them to hurry up,' or else to 'let them find things out for themselves,' instead of a patient, helpful effort to join with the examiners in securing a critical study of conditions and methods, and so secure a full report from which no doubtful item of value, or unsettled statement of fact, shall have been omitted."

These observations read like true, and are an indictment of the intent of the bank officers concerned. Do bank officers assist or resent examinations by the directors' committees?

LARGER PAID CIRCULATION IN THE MIDDLE WEST THAN ANY THREE OF ITS COMPETITORS COMBINED

This is a very significant question. Mr. Perine says that his "observation has been that directors generally know what to look for in a bank, provided only they are given clear, complete data, in substantially the form a professional examiner would prepare, with a basis for checking details instead of handling them. Some officials I know of are fully co-operating with their examining committees, and aiding them in these particulars. Is it not fair to expect all to do so? Ought committees ever to be asked, 'Do you want a statement of this thing?' or 'Will you want to bother to look into that thing?' Assuredly not, if the work of directors is to have an adequate value."

The speaker said he hoped all cities would follow New York in its adoption of the famous Chicago plan of clearing house examination and control, and that other states would adopt the New York state plan defining the duties of directors and of filing their reports with the state. Directors should be earnest and painstaking and never perfunctory. The responsibility is great and calls for alert, intelligent activity.

POINTS IN OIL TRUST DECISION

The United States supreme court holds:

That the Standard Oil Company is a monopoly in restraint of trade.

That the giant corporation must be dissolved within six months.

Corporations whose contracts are "not unreasonably restrictive of competition" are not affected.

Other great corporations whose acts may be called into question will be dealt with according to the merits of their particular cases.

The court was unanimous as to the main features of the decision, Justice Harlan dissenting only as to a limitation of the application of the Sherman anti-trust law.

President Taft and cabinet will consider immediately the entire trust situation and the advisability of pressing for a federal incorporation act.

Progressive members of congress plan movement for speedy legislation which will prohibit "all combinations in restraint of trade" regardless of question of "reasonableness."

A decision in the tobacco trust case, which was expected, was not announced and may be handed down on May 29th.

GROUP SYSTEM PROPOSED FOR FLORIDA

In his annual address at the Ocala convention, C. W. Lamar, president of the Florida association, gave a large share of his time to a discussion of the benefit of the group system of organization. Mr. Lamar, a wise and conservative banker, told his fellows he had been watching the development of the group plan in other states and that he most heartily could recommend it. Further he said:

"Especially should it appeal to Florida bankers, the state being so peculiarly situated geographically. There are a great many benefits to be derived in having meetings in different parts of the state. I also strongly advocate the establishment of credit departments in the clearing house cities and in the groups, in this way reducing to a minimum the risk and the loss where large lines of accommodation are extended by a number of banks to the same borrower. The plan is simple. In brief, loans exceeding a stated amount are reported to the clearing house or group, and the borrower is charged with the same, without, however, any mention being made of the bank making the loan. Any member may have access to the loan book at any time and all times, and may without the knowledge of the manager examine the records and judge for himself whether or not further advancements are warranted. The only information disclosed by the records is the total amount loaned to such borrower by the members of that clearing house or group. Such a plan would prevent borrowers who have had extended to them by their own bank or group as much accommodation as they are entitled to from imposing on the claim of the bank which first accommodated them without giving that bank notice. Thoroughly organized groups and clearing house cities could in this way become acquainted with the needs of commercial and other houses, and, if at any time in the market for commercial paper, could invest at home instead of sending off for the same."

The plan of operating group credit bureaus and special bank examinations is being worked out in several progressive states and some day must prevail in all states. Country banks require an exchange of credit data quite as much in proportion to the sums involved, as do the big city banks. Once their big city cousins would not exchange information of this kind but now it is a tenet of their daily religion. Mr. Lamar also showed his wisdom and breadth by putting in a strong plea for a greater membership in the A. B. A., to give Florida more prestige in the upper circles. It was a model address by a model banker and association official.

The New Jersey System of Group Bank Examinations

The problems of the banker in these busy days of rapid development are very different from what they were one hundred, fifty, or even twenty-five years ago. Conditions in this country are also very different from what they are in other countries. This is especially true as far as it relates to bankers in extending credit to borrowers. Years ago the matter of making a loan from a bank was regarded as of very considerable importance, and the problems connected with the duplication of credits were not apparent. The banker and the borrower are jointly responsible for a decided change in banking methods in recent years, for it is certainly much easier to establish a line of credit with banks nowadays than it was years ago.

In your state, with its many small cities, and the rapid growth of both large and small enterprises, it has been found hard for some of your banks to keep close track of their loans. A borrower can so easily borrow from two or three banks in the same city, or from banks in the nearby towns.

The bankers of Group One of your association have, for a number of years, observed the development of this danger, and recently they have taken a most progressive step in the direction of reducing risks that arise from the duplication of credits as far as local borrowers are concerned. In devising a plan to solve this difficulty, they have very wisely combined with it a plan for the private examination of the banks in the group. These examinations are to be conducted along lines very similar to those that have been adopted in several cities where clearing house examiners have been appointed. It is also hoped that the plan devised will assist materially in keeping the directors informed in regard to the condition of the banks, and also enlist their more active support in supervising their affairs.

The first step taken to carry out this plan for the exchange of credit information and the examination of the banks was to make a contract with a firm of chartered accountants. The selection was made with great care, for it was arranged that the accountants were to act as the medium through which information regarding the duplication of credits was to be obtained and distributed. The association kept continually in mind the fact that every possible precaution must be taken to prevent any abuse of the privilege thus accorded the banks.

The arrangement provides that whenever any bank desires to ascertain the amount of the obligation of any borrower to the other banks, the inquiring bank shall fill out a form addressed to the accountants reading as follows:

Dear Sirs: Under the agreement between certain members of Group One of the New Jersey Bankers Association and yourselves, please furnish us in confidence the aggregate liabilities to all contracting members of said group, of the parties named below.

In making the request the inquiring banks state the amount of the borrower's obligation to them. Upon receiving the inquiry, the accountants at once send another form to the various members asking them to state the liability of the borrower to their bank. Upon receiving their replies, the accountants combine the amounts, and the inquiring bank is furnished with the total obligation of the borrower to all the banks. In no case are particulars given regarding either the amounts or names of the individual banks to whom the borrower may be obligated. The inquiring bank, upon ascertaining the total obligation, can take the matter up with the borrower as it sees fit. Regular forms for all of this work are provided, so that there is very little work entailed on the part of any bank.

The other provision of the plan is for the accountants to make a thorough examination of the affairs of each bank which has entered the arrangement. This consists of an examination of the balance sheet, but it is left to each individual bank to decide as to whether or not they desire to have the individual accounts and the loans verified by communicating with the customers. The accountants have a staff of experienced bank examiners and are thus enabled to insure, to even the smallest bank, the very best of service. The reports can be depended upon as being absolutely impartial and independent. The examiners are bound by an oath of secrecy, and every possible precaution is taken to keep all matters in connection with examinations absolutely secret and confidential.

During the progress of the examination, the examiner meets with the audit committee or, if they or the officers so desire, with the full board, and goes over the loans with them. This plan is favored by many officers in order that the executive committee and directors may feel assured that they are familiar with all of the loans and investments of the bank. Upon completing the examination a full report is prepared by the accountants covering every detail of the examination. This report is delivered to the president of the bank, and contains a blank page upon which the directors are to sign their names, certifying that they have read the report. Brief recommendations for improvement in the bank's system and records are also included in the reports.

Group One comprises the banks in Middlesex county, and includes such cities and towns as New Brunswick, Perth Amboy and South River. The organization is similar to that which prevails in many of the state bankers associations throughout the country, but it does not include the powers usually given to clearing house associations and, therefore, the accountants do not report their findings to any committee of the group. The reports go only to the bank, and are for the inspection of the directors.

In inaugurating their plan, the group has not in any manner attempted to compel the bankers in the group to enter the arrangement. They have taken the wisest possible course in seeking at the start to establish to the satisfaction of all the desirability of the exchange of credit information and the value of the examinations. On account of a number of bankers entering the arrangement, the expense of an examination is considerably less for each bank than it would be if separate examinations were arranged for with the accountants.

As the system is developed and established, it will have a strong tendency to lessen unsound and dishonest banking methods, and in time of panic it will enable the bankers to act together. If, at any time, a stronger organization is desired, somewhat similar to that of a clearing house, proper rules can be adopted, and the exact condition of each bank can quickly be ascertained by the accountants and the proper information furnished to the central organization. During panic conditions, if a bank undergoes an examination, it is sometimes regarded as an evidence of weakness; but under the arrangement adopted by Group One the public will not feel the slightest alarm on account of an examination, because they will know that it is being conducted in accordance with the arrangements of the association, and has been made many times in the past.

In this country we have an independent banking system, and it seems to suit our ideas better than the branch bank plan; but we must not overlook the fact that our system has serious weaknesses. We all know the strain on the resources of a bank when a run is started, whether it be in time of panic, or when some false rumor has gained circulation. At such times, it would be most desirable if we had some kind of a central organization. The Aldrich plan, which is a most comprehensive scheme, seems to be meeting with general approval, and if adopted it will, no doubt, add greatly to the strengthening of our system.

Banks sometimes close on account of bad management and, under these conditions, the depositors often think they are bearing the burden of the community but, I am sure, you will all agree that the sound and entirely solvent banks bear their full share of the burden when a badly managed bank fails. All of these points emphasize the desirability of bankers combining to protect themselves. The time is past in this country when a bank in any community can, on account of its own strength and good management, look with indifference on the methods of unscrupulous bankers.

It is, therefore, seen that one of the most, if not the most important essential in making this or any similar plan pre-eminently successful is the securing of the combined support of all the banks. Bankers have been, and should continue to be punctilious in keeping strictly confidential the affairs of their customers so far as relates to their deposit balances, and information in regard to their loans should only be given to those who are entitled to receive it; but they are not justified in carrying this point to the extent of refusing to co-operate in the exchange of credit information. Bankers are fast coming to realize that if their loans are good there is no risk in submitting them to the inspection of proper authorities. In the cities, where there are clearing house examiners, the bankers most willingly co-operate with the examiner and present to him all the facts in regard to the loans, because they know he is working for their interests and, if possible, will save them, as well as the other interested banks, from loss.

The adoption of this plan by other groups situated similarly would do much to raise to a still higher plane the banking business of the country, and would be a lasting benefit to the public. It would also encourage borrowers to employ chartered accountants to certify to the statements which they submitted to their bankers, for if the bankers show they are willing to have their records and loans inspected, there would be no excuse for concerns which float their paper through note brokers not submitting to a correspondingly rigid inquiry. If the borrower would, in addition to the examination, register his paper, he would not only receive the praise of the banking public, but he would find his paper in such demand that he would have no trouble in securing the best terms in the market.

Successful Country Bankers

W. O. Jones of the National Park, New York, tells the Texans at Dallas convention his prescription for the ideal country banker

The "city" banker has been a favorite theme for many years. His victories have been portrayed in vivid and glowing colors; his patriotism has been elevated for the edification of coming voters; his public spirit and interest in the welfare of his community have been rehearsed in eloquent terms; his co-operation in matters religious and charitable has been the occasion of frequent encomiums in press and pulpit. Now, it appears to me, therefore, that the present is an opportune moment in which to bring the "country" banker into the limelight of publicity. After all, the difference between the country and the city banker is not so great as might at first appear. In most instances, the city banker is simply the country banker come to town and adapting himself to his particular environment. In my opinion, the city banker is more apt to become narrow, and I may say provincial, in his ideas and methods, than the country banker, for the reason that the great city bank is becoming more and more a huge piece of commercial machinery, wherein each officer performs a certain specific line of work, or, in other words, becomes a cog upon the wheel. Thus, in a city bank, there are departments such as correspondence, foreign exchange, registry and transfer, coupon, safe deposit, a department for the purchase and sale of securities, credit department and information bureau, new business department, etc.

Generally, there are experts connected with these various departments, men capable of expressing an intelligent and prompt opinion, relative to the matters pertaining to their respective branches, and the specialist in the large city bank, pursuing his work within his well appointed groove, may be inclined to lightly regard the very important place occupied in his community by his brother, the Texas country banker. The medical and banking professions in the city and country bear a certain degree of similarity to one another. In case of illness in the city, there are specialists for the various diseases to which the flesh is heir; experts in the treatment of the eye, ear, nose, throat, nerves, etc. Not so in the country, however. The country practitioner must be more or less familiar with these varied branches of his profession and he, therefore, represents a force in his community that is very far-reaching in its beneficent results. There is no question in my mind, but that the country banker and country bank employee come into much closer touch with their customers in matters religious, educational, charitable, political, and especially commercial, than any other member of the community. The ideal country banker, therefore, is a composite production, embodying much that is best in the teacher, preacher, doctor, lawyer, farmer and artisan, and one whose example and influence should leave an impress upon his community second to none.

In view of the pre-eminent position occupied by the country banker in his community, let us direct our thoughts, for a few moments, to some of the qualifications which he should possess, or at least cultivate, in order to more fully meet the requirements of his profession. The relation of the business community to the local banker is somewhat different from that entertained toward those engaged in other lines of endeavor. The local bank is the one place of business where the public universally expects, and generally gets a "square deal." It is the one place where deceit, however well concealed at first, will not prevail in the long run. The country banker is the guardian of the property of others. He, like the mariner, scans the horizon for the signs of the times, and, as has been said, reefs his sail, or spreads his full canvas, as the signs of the times indicate financial storms or smooth sailing. When a wave of pessimism overspreads the land, when dark distress stalks abroad, when ominous signs of impending danger confront the commercial fabric, it is to the local banker that the community instinctively turns and plaintively sings:

Banker, tell us of the night,
What its signs of promise are.

As I have already intimated, the office of many a country banker, during the 1907 panic, served just as effectual a field for the display of the highest degree of generalship, embodying courage, resourcefulness and tactical skill as any battleground. Let me illustrate my point by citing a case from actual experience during the dark days of October of that panic year.

There were three banks located in a little city in Texas, one national, one private and one small state institution of comparatively recent origin. The two former (the national and the private bank) had been in the field for a considerable period of time and had been moderately successful, but with the advent of the panic the management of each institution lost its nerve, and, largely through fear (for both banks were shortly re-opened), the two institutions were temporarily closed.

The cashier of the newer institution (called the "baby bank" of the town) is a young fellow of sterling character, and who had made a hard fight for his little bank. One morning, in the earlier part of the panic, we received a long telegram from him stating in substance about as follows:

"Both of my neighbors closed up this afternoon, but by the Eternal, the First State Bank of ———, clean as a hound's tooth, proposes to stand up, provided you give it proper encouragement by sending it some currency, and it is up to you as to whether this little bank shall live or die."

This heroic and martial strain in his message appealed to us. There, on the Texas plains, was a lone country banker, like Leonidas at Thermopylae, his banking comrades having already fallen by his side, alone and without any serried host to support him by way of clearing house certificates or other local co-operation, and he took his final stand and made his appeal. What reply could we make to such a financial patriot, but to cast aside for the moment the thought that his average balance with us was only about $700, and, therefore, not entitling him to any accommodation to speak of, and promptly wire him in substance as follows: "Hold the fort, though sorely pressed;

Twelve hundred plunks have been expressed."

Again, the ideal country banker should be a man of liberal education, and should be able to intelligently discuss the fundamental principles of religion with his minister, of commercial law with his lawyer, of education with his school superintendent, of politics with his representative in the legislative halls, and of civic righteousness with his mayor and city council. In brief, he should be acquainted with, and vitally interested in, all of the great problems affecting the public mind in his day and generation. He should not be a stranger to the consideration and discussion of the great economic questions which confront the business world of today, and upon whose proper solution the commercial fabric of to-morrow rests. We desire in this presence and at this time to bear loyal testimony and admiration to the fact that many a country banker rose magnificently to the situation and rendered phenomenal, intelligent and persistent work in behalf of sound currency and proper banking methods in 1896, when the very integrity of the monetary system was assailed and when certain sections of our fair land were thoroughly impregnated with the Bryan miasma of free silver. No voice in the business community of that trying time was more sane, more eloquent or more potent than that of the country banker.

Furthermore, the local banker is liable to have as many different propositions submitted to him for his consideration as he has depositors, and in order to properly solve the mental and financial problems of others, a well-stored and thoroughly trained mind on the part of the banker is a prime requisite. The day is past when the successful country banker is one of narrow sympathies, contracted vision, barren mentality—one of the shrewd horse-trading "David Harum" variety. One of the meanest, most parsimonious, smallest specimens of humanity whom I have ever met was a country banker who held a mortgage upon my father's farm. I very vividly recall how my father (who was also pastor of a country church) made preparations several months ahead to meet the payment upon the mortgage, and how I had exacted a promise from him (based upon exemplary conduct for a definite period) to permit me to accompany him to the bank. As a lad I had, with that generosity and over-coloring so characteristic of youthful exuberance, mentally pictured this "Prince of Finance" (for he was so regarded locally) as being the very embodiment of the finest qualities entering into the composition of the ideal country banker and business man. It was not long, however, before my ideal was shattered. We came into his august presence, not, however, to be cordially greeted with a "good-morning." No word of salutation to the father who had labored early and late months ahead to meet the payment, no pat upon the head of the early rising expectant lad, but simply a gruff, "Well, what is it?" The "pound of flesh" was exchanged, and as, in later years, I recall this, my first banking experience, I rejoiced that there was a Shakespeare capable of depicting in indelible colors, a narrow, close-fisted, hide-bound character, so that the name of Skylock is to-day typical of all that is mean, not only in the banking fraternity, but also in the entire business world. You may rest assured that, after my visit above alluded to, I was in no mood to sing:

"I want to be a banker,
And with the bankers stand,
A frown upon my forehead,
And an iceberg in my hand."

"Again, a prime requisite for the success of the ideal country banker is the possession of tact. Now tact is a very comprehensive term. It may be defined as being a quick or intuitive appreciation of what is fit, proper or fine, fine or ready mental discernment, shown in saying or doing the proper thing and avoiding what would offend or disturb, skill or facility in dealing with men or emergencies. Now the country banker is continuously dealing with men and the emergencies which face men at different periods of their lives. As has already been intimated, it is to the banker that the people instinctively turn for advice, co-operation and support in their day of trouble; hence, therefore, an especially wide and fertile field is presented to the country banker for the display of tact. The country banker becomes a sort of financial physician, who is freely consulted by his patients (his customers) and he, placing his finger of experience and knowledge upon the subject submitted, diagnoses the case and generally renders an intelligent and unbiased opinion as to whether the risk is a healthy one or not. Many of these financial physicians instead of being ready to be "Oslerized" at forty, attain a finer touch and a more discerning judgment as the years go by. In the intimate relationship existing between your banks and your borrowing clientele, there exists a sacredness almost akin to that of the home.

Still another, and newer, phase of banking experience confronts the ideal country banker, and demands his serious consideration, and to which brief allusion has already been made. You may recall I stated that, by reason of the fact that the local field does not always afford a sufficient channel for the employment of all his loanable funds, relief in this connection is frequently sought through the aid of a reserve city correspondent. During the period of the early development of this and other states, when the demand for money was largely in excess of the supply, it was the general custom of the country banker to charge all the traffic would bear, but with the rapid growth of the various localities and the influx of investment funds, the borrowing demands of the local merchants and farmers have been materially curtailed and with the result that many a country banker is now being confronted with the problem as to the best method of utilizing his surplus profits, and hundreds of small country banks are resorting more or less to the investment of a portion of their funds in commercial paper. We have purchased, in one day, over one-quarter million dollars commercial paper for a Texas bank. I know a country banker in the state of Illinois whose credit files, I venture to assert, reflect more closely the actual financial standing of a majority of the makers of commercial paper in the United States to-day than do the records of many of the more pretentious city banks. This particular country banker has for years been obliged to purchase commercial paper in order to utilize his surplus funds, and he has adapted his institution to that end by supplying it with the necessary credit machinery. The point which I am endeavoring to make is to impress upon the ideal country banker of the future the necessity resting upon him to familiarize himself in a general way, at least, with the merits and demerits of the representative securities offered for sale in our leading exchanges or used as collateral in our principal financial centers, and more especially of the larger cities in and contiguous to his own state, as well as to have at least more than a passing acquaintance with the character, worth and standing of individuals, firms, and corporations whose obligations are brought to his attention almost daily, through the mails or through the traveling representatives of the bond and commercial paper houses who at present radiate from the financial centers and press their wares into almost every hamlet. It seems to me that you, the bankers of the Lone Star State, with its equable climate, its fertile soil, its increasingly diversified products, its rapid development, and with your nearly $300,000,000 of bank deposits, and especially if you are blessed with two or three successive bumper cotton crops, will be confronted with precisely the same problems respecting suitable avenues for the investment of your surplus funds as the country bankers in other sections of our land are now experiencing.

Another suggestion which, in my opinion, is well worthy of the serious consideration of the ideal country banker, is the benefit derived from travel, and from comparison and exchange of views with brother bankers located elsewhere. I have already alluded to the danger of the country becoming too provincial and falling into a rut. Now, there is no agency more potent in extracting one from a rut than travel. There is no better eye-opener, ear-opener and even heart-opener, than travel, with its incidental benefits. For, through the eye the banker should obtain a broader vision than he possessed before, through the ear he should secure invaluable information and suggestions pertaining to his business, and through the heart he should establish some of the finest affiliations and friendships of a lifetime. Within the last decade great changes have occurred in banking views, and methods which may heretofore have been regarded as somewhat unbusinesslike (and, perhaps, undignified), have come to be considered as at least partially necessary in view of these radical changes. Time was when customers came voluntarily and proffered their business to the bank; now the banker, not infrequently, must go into the highways and byways, not only for the purpose of seeking new business, but also in order to retain the old. That some of the larger and more progressive banking institutions at the reserve centers very highly value the benefits resulting from travel, is evidenced by the fact that they are adopting the policy heretofore so successfully practiced by the wholesaler and jobber by having at least one or more of their officers or representatives come (through travel) into personal contact with as many of their customers throughout the country as practicable. These banks have learned the lesson that the more closely their institutions are identified with their customers the more they know of the character, worth and standing of their borrowers, the more familiar they are with the precise nature of the local security offered as collateral by the borrowing bank, the better equipped they are to meet the requirements of their dealers throughout the Union.

I will not enlarge further upon this phase of the topic, but I am confident that you will conclude with me in recognizing that in travel, we find a worthy stimulant for the eye, the ear and the heart, and your association seems to have realized the benefits of travel more quickly and profoundly than the associations of the other states as evidenced by the intelligence and care exercised for several years in providing facilities for instructive itineraries into different sections of our own and adjoining countries.

During the last few years no better opportunity has been accorded the country banker for enlarging his acquaintance among the banking fraternity, for coming into closer touch with his own correspondents and for acquainting himself with up-to-date methods in bank administration and with modern thought upon banking subjects than by periodic journeys to group meetings and the sessions of your State Bankers Association and, if possible, culminating with the annual meeting of the American Bankers Association.

Considerable sympathy is felt for Phillips, as he has made good his shortage and has always borne a good reputation. He will appeal.

Southwest Banking Conditions

George B. Harrison, vice-president of the New England National, Kansas City, reads a valuable paper at both the Texas and Oklahoma conventions Development of the great Southwest, in every department of human activity, has been gradual and remarkable. Handicapped by having in its territory a large part of what was once called "The Great American Desert," it has steadily shown increase of wealth from which stock raising, agriculture, mining and commerce. No small part of the credit of this development is due to the banks.

Under more or less unfavorable, I might say speculative, conditions, the banks as a whole have been well managed, have constantly shown increased strength, and have made a record to be proud of. In a few instances there have been crop failures as a result of drouth, bringing with them financial distress, but in almost every instance failures in banking institutions have come from mis-management; from either the desire of the officers to promote and finance schemes promising large profits to themselves, or from inefficient officers permitting visionary and unscrupulous customers to absorb the bank's resources in speculative schemes. But few failures are recorded where bank funds have been loaned with reasonable care and have been well distributed; and very few instances are recorded where banks with proper assets have suffered more than temporary embarrassment as a result of financial panics.

The history of bank failures shows the personnel of the management is of prime importance—of greater importance even than the capitalization. In fact, the capitalization of a bank or banks in excess of the needs of a community easily can be a source of weakness, in that the surplus of money and the desire to secure good returns upon it too frequently foster speculation and bad credits.

It follows that the best interests of communities are subserved when properly managed banks are protected against extravagant and unwise competition. A bank differs from the ordinary corporation engaged in general trade in that it is semipublic institution; in almost every case the public, through its deposits, has more interest in the institution than the shareholders themselves, with the result the corporate bank occupies in a way the position of a trustee. A community therefore, is vitally interested in the success and solvency of its banks; in fact, the prosperity of any community depends largely upon the character of its banks. Recognizing these facts, Kansas, at its 1911 session of the legislature, by special statute has given its banking board the authority to refuse an application for a bank charter when in its wisdom it deems the applicants unworthy, or the commercial demands of the community too limited to support a bank or an additional bank. It is possible that prejudice might influence a board and an application from deserving men be refused, that poor judgment might result in a community needing additional banking facilities being denied, but such cases would be extremely few. The constitutionality of the Kansas law is being questioned by some, but in my opinion, from a business standpoint, there is no doubt but this law is sound, and I hope it will be enacted in other states. And while our comptroller of the currency has adopted a similar policy, his authority for such a position is uncertain. He is entitled to have that authority more clearly defined and congress would do well to enact a law similar to the Kansas statute. The wisdom of this policy cannot be questioned. Conservatism, honesty and experience are qualities absolutely essential to safe banking, and every possible effort should be made to keep men without these qualities out of the business. Do not misunderstand me—I believe in competition as long as it is legitimate, but in banking—the people's business—it should be limited to safe hands and to safe proportions.

There is another matter I would call to your attention. All of us at times have found it difficult, if not impossible, to get from our correspondents in answer to inquiries by letter, information as to general conditions, when those conditions are bad. If conditions are good, no one hesitates to be an optimist, but when conditions are bad, or even alarming, it is difficult to find one brave enough to even hint at the truth. I presume this is because the average man does not wish to be a pessimist. But should this condition exist? Are not the bankers of the country, the small ones as well as the large, entitled to have better information than they now generally receive? If they were permitted to keep in closer touch with affairs, is it not self-evident they could materially assist in correcting unsafe conditions? No banker, I take it, whether his capital is $10,000 and deposits $100,000, or these items reach into the millions, but is anxious to do his part toward preventing times like 1907. I believe the banks of the Southwest are entitled to better information than they now receive.

My remarks thus far have been general, but to be more specific: How can we improve our southwestern banks? What are our weaknesses? The management and condition of the banks of the Southwest are good, and I feel we should be congratulated that but few criticisms can be made; but there are some, and while I shall speak candidly I know the statements I make are true and I hope they may be beneficial.

It might be well to consider first, what are the functions of a commercial bank? It is to the commercial banks I would refer. In my opinion, they are to receive deposits and to repay them on demand or at an agreed time; to buy and sell exchange; to make collections; and to loan its funds to those who have or will have in a short time, some commodity to dispose of, and can be sent to market, from the sale of which the money can be repaid. In other words, a commercial bank should not make a practice of loaning to those whose assets are not liquid. Consider for a moment what this means. Nearly all of a bank's liabilities are payable on demand. A depositor considers that his money should be available for him to use any time he wants it, and the law recognizes his right to have it. when you consider that there is not enough money in all the banks of the United States to pay the checks drawn in a single day, you realize the difficult position a bank occupies when its assets are not readily convertible into cash. It is of great importance therefore that its loans should be of such a character that it knows they will be paid in the ordinary course of business when due, and not be repeatedly renewed.

With these premises accepted, let us consider what acts, frequently practiced, tend to hamper the facilities or endanger the existence of the bank. Of minor importance, I would refer to the practice becoming daily more prevalent, of bank officers borrowing from their correspondents with their bank stock as collateral. Except for temporary needs I believe this to be a mistake. It is an evidence that the borrower is too weak financially to carry the stock, or that he is speculating and using the funds in outside matters. Of all men, a banker should be conservative, and he should not undertake to carry a greater amount of stock in his institution than he can handle with comparative ease. If he is using his funds for speculation it is better that he retire from the banking business, for a speculator has no place behind a bank counter. The first obligation of the city bank is to the correspondent itself. A loan to an officer is always counted against the "line" of the correspondent, no matter what statement to the contrary is made, and to that extent the resources of the bank are curtailed. All of the reserve banks have such loans and I suppose always will have; but they are a fault, and as an evidence they are regarded as such the several banking departments are now inquiring more carefully as to loans of this character. I realize there are times when such loans are necessary and entirely proper, and to these I do not refer.

A weakness in our banking methods which has developed and become more apparent in the last few years is the tendency of the banks to look to their correspondents instead of their note files to secure funds upon which to operate. The cause of this rests almost entirely with the reserve-city banks. In their desire to increase their business, they are constantly offering funds to banks not their correspondents on condition that they bring at least a part of their business to them, or, by reason of competition, too frequently the city bank hesitates to advise its correspondent to curtail its loans, although it then knows the correspondent is expanded beyond the limits of safety. This practice when adhered to, tends to destroy the courage of the country banker, for he finds it much easier with this resource before him, to grant new loans than to refuse them; and so much easier to call on his correspondent than to ask his customers to reduce their loans. When a correspondent is calling for assistance and the question is asked: "Why do you not reduce your loans?" do we get the answer: "Indeed, I can not insist on my customers paying me, they would be offended; they would spread it broadcast I was hard up and it would ruin my business." The banker's pride, his desire to have it known that he can and will finance all deals in his community, is the cause of this unfortunate position; but the practice leads to over-expansion, a condition which has caused no little uneasiness in the recent past. Do not misunderstand me. I realize that in most sections there are seasons when a bank needs and has a right to call upon its correspondent for assistance in taking care of the demands incident to crop movements, cattle feeding and the like, but I refer to the bank that does not hesitate to borrow at any and all times.

As a close sequence to the tendency just mentioned, is the practice of many banks to loan on non-liquid collateral, or a lack of care to have their funds loaned on marketable assets. I would be liberal in defining liquid loans. It is useless to expect any bank in an agricultural or stock raising section to have much paper of a character that would be termed "liquid" by our New York friends, so for practical use I would define liquid loans to embrace those made for not exceeding six months time, that will or can be paid without fail when due, without difficulty and without sacrifice on the part of the borrower. Contra, it might be well to define the non-liquid loan as one which neither the lender nor the borrower expects to be paid when due, nor cannot be met without sacrifice. This latter loan comes principally from financing mercantile or manufacturing concerns with insufficient capital, or from financing real estate deals, either of a speculative or a legitimate nature. I realize that no bank can keep itself entirely clear of this slow or non-liquid paper, for as careful as we may be a certain amount will get into our files in the natural course of business; but it is the lack of appreciation on the part of many bankers of the necessity of keeping their loans liquid that I would impress upon you. A bank that permits itself to accumulate non-liquid paper and can not contract its loans under normal conditions to meet ordinary demands, is in an unsafe condition, and as an evidence of this we too often see where a bank whose trouble is the non-liquid condition of its assets, suspends or is forced to sell its business to a competitor.

While there are some other practices which might be named that tend to weaken our banking situation, yet I do not feel they are of sufficient importance to warrant our referring to them at this time. As a whole we have done well. We have played no small part in the development of the resources of our section. Through that development we have increased the value of our lands, have assisted our customers to accumulate untold wealth, and our institutions at the same time have gained strength thereby.

Commenting upon the presence of manufacturers in the bond market and their purchases of good interest-paying bonds, a bond dealer of some note says that it is due to the dullness in the manufacturing trade and the desire of manufacturers to employ the capital which would otherwise remain idle in providing a revenue to their respective companies.

In its report to the Commissioner of State Banking, the Commercial Trust Company of Philadelphia, Pa., makes the following showing of its condition at the close of business April 29th: Total resources, $14,135,186, inclusive of $5,282,098 securities; loans, $4,898,175; cash, $3,373,276; surplus, $2,000,000; deposits, $10,895,872; capital stock, $1,000,000.

Pittsburgh courts were busy last week with graft cases, in connection with the passage of the municipal depository ordinance through councils. Dr. F. C. Blessing, president of common council, was tried the second time on a charge of accepting a bribe. He was convicted the first time, some months ago, but was granted a new trial. On the second trial the jury failed to agree and were discharged. Another trial is expected. Dr. E. R. Walters, at present director of the department of health, but a member of select council in June, 1908, was tried on a charge of accepting a bribe. The jury returned a verdict of acquittal and placed the costs on the county. Then F. N. Hoffstot, banker, and president of the Pressed Steel Car Company, was placed on trial for conspiracy. The jury in his case, after being out all night, asked for further instructions. Going back and deliberating further they reported later a hopeless deadlock and were discharged. Hoffstot was again placed on trial Monday, charged with bribery. Charles C. Schad, formerly a member of the select council, was placed on trial on the charge of bribery. He was tried once before; the jury disagreed, making another trial necessary.

Spokane, May 16.—One hundred or more officers of banks in eastern Washington will meet in the assembly room of the Old National bank in Spokane on May 25th to perfect plans for the organization of Group One of the Washington State Bankers Association. The meeting will be followed by a banquet in the Hall of the Doges. These counties will compose the group: Pend Oreille, Spokane, Stevens, Lincoln, Adams, Ferry, Whitman and Franklin. The Spokane Clearing House Association is fathering the movement to put in force the group system in the state organization. A committee headed by Thomas H. Brewer, president of the Fidelity National Bank, is handling the arrangements. Other members are Charles A. McLean, cashier of the Traders' National Bank and W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National Bank. The Spokane group will be the first under the new system.

Water Power Sites Taxable

State tax commission of Washington has rendered a decision that water power sites are taxable. The ruling was made in answer to an inquiry by the assessor of Klickitat county. The decision follows in part: "The law requires the assessment of all property at its full and fair value in money. A water power is not assessed as a water power, but 160 acres of land which has upon it a very desirable and valuable water power and which makes that 160 acres of land worth from four to 40 times as much as the adjoining 160 acres of land, should be assessed at from four to 40 times higher than the adjoining 160 acres."

State Bonds All Paid

Washington is free of bonded debt the first time in its history, and has a working capital of $300,000, according to a statement from John G. Lewis, state treasurer, received by Spokane banks. Mr. Lewis has drawn a warrant for $700,000 to take up the bonds outstanding against the general fund, also a warrant for $13,937 to pay interest due. Special bonds outstanding amount to $321,024, which cannot be taken up until 1914. These are not debts against the state, as one issue of $206,024 is to be paid out of the school fund, and one of $125,000 out of the highway fund. The state is drawing 2 per cent interest on its daily balance on moneys deposited in banks, which means a revenue of $17,000 a year. The state owns $8,000,000 worth of bonds in various permanent funds, which draw $400,000 yearly in interest. The legislature's budget in 1907 was more than $5,000,000; that of 1909 was nearly $13,000,000, while that of 1911 was over $10,000,000.

Northwestern News Notes

Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintenance of the Harriman system, who was in Spokane a few days ago looking over the plans for the building of the road on the third district of the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Company line, announced that the union station here will be for the O-W. R. & N. and Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound roads. He added that the Hill lines had made no overtures for the use of the station, when this is completed, the work of establishing yards at Dishman, Wash., will be rushed. The work in the cut-off between Spokane and Ayer, 103 miles, is progressing.

Kootenai County State Bank at St. Maries, Idaho, has declared a semiannual dividend of 5 per cent, which brings the dividends up to 13 per cent for the year. William Dollar, William Trueman, Leon DeMars and E. R. Whitla were elected directors for the coming year.

Burlington Trust Company of Burlington, Vt., whose chief officials, H. L. Ward, president, and Edmund C. Mower, vice-president, were in the city recently, has bought $51,000 worth of Spokane securities. The company holds large investments in Washington farm lands loans and the two officers are here to look over the field prior to investing further this year. C. P. Smith, president of the Burlington Savings Bank, also was in the city a few days ago.

Seattle

It is said that no less than $3,000,000 worth of Seattle commercial paper is now held in the East.

Seattle banks are making no concessions. They are still holding at 6 and 7 per cent, according to the loan.

Reserves held by local banks are unusually high. Country banks have more money than usual on deposit here, due to the fact that the grain crop of the Northwest has been more closely sold up than at any time in two years.

The Seattle bankers who were summoned to New York to furnish testimony in the United Wireless hearing, have been delayed in that city far beyond the time they expected to remain there. Those who went from Seattle were: J. W. Swalwell, vice-president of the National Bank of Commerce; James McVay, cashier of the Metropolitan Bank; R. V. Ankeny, cashier of the Seattle National Bank; D. H. Moss, vice-president and cashier of the First National Bank, and C. S. Hanley, cashier of the Mercantile Bank.

H. C. Henry, president of the Metropolitan Bank, who has been touring Southern Europe and Northern Africa, is expected to return to Seattle in a few days.

William N. Redfield, president of the Mercantile Bank, has left Seattle for New York, where he will remain for several weeks.

A new bank in the Broadway district is to be opened in the next few weeks with British Columbia capital largely interested, according to an announcement by M. P. Leary of this city. The new institution will be called the Broadway State Bank and will have its quarters in the Avon building at the southwest corner of Broadway and Denny Way. The charter has already been secured.

Just how local banks stand in the estimation of investors and business men generally is shown by the prices commanded by Seattle bank stocks when offered on the local market. Some of the stock of the Dexter Horton National was put up for sale a few days ago and a broker offered $260. This was immediately followed by an offer of $265 for 100 shares. Other ratings of local bank stocks include: Mercantile Bank at $116; Metropolitan at $200; Scandinavian-American at $225; Seattle National at $265.

The Citizens State Bank has been organized at Wolcott, with James Blake as president, and Chas Kleist, present county recorder, as cashier.

The directors of the McKeen National Bank, Terre Haute, presented to Herman Hulman a silver loving cup on his eightieth birthday. On the eightieth birthday of W. R. McKeen a like gift was made by the directors.

Edgar F. Hiatt has been elected president of the Dickman Trust Company, of Richmond, to succeed Samuel Dickinson, whose death occurred a week ago. Mr. Hiatt has been connected with the institution since its organization, and for several years had been vice-president.

That there is plenty of money in Grant county is indicated by the growth of the new Farmers' Trust and Savings Company, which opened its doors for business the first of the year. For a new institution the showing is remarkable. On the last day of the fourth month this bank shows nearly $250,000 in deposits and $331,000 in resources. This being a farmers' bank, its business naturally comes largely from the country and it indicates a healthy condition of the finances of the county.

W. J. Gemmill, who organized the Clarksburg State Bank, October 25, 1904, and has always filled the position of cashier of that institution, has tendered his resignation, to take effect on July first, as he will go to Broad Ripple, Indianapolis, where he has organized a bank, the stock being held by Indianapolis capitalists. The stockholders of the Broad Ripple Bank have elected W. H. Alford, president. Emsley Johnson, vice-president, and W. J. Gemmill, cashier.

G. E. MacKinnon

Des Moines, May 18.—Gilger E. MacKinnon, vice-president of the Mechanics Savings, Des Moines, has been made president of the institution succeeding H. B. Wyman who has sold his stock to Mr. MacKinnon and employees of the bank. Harry F. Gross was elected vice-president succeeding Mr. MacKinnon. W. A. Rutledge was chosen on the directory board.

Mr. Wyman became president of the Mechanics when it was organized by Mr. MacKinnon seven years ago. At that time, Mr. MacKinnon was cashier. Later the latter was advanced to vice-president. Active management of the institution has always been in the hands of Mr. MacKinnon. The bank has made a steady and strong growth and now has deposits of over $630,000. It is planning to erect a new building adjoining the present structure in which it has been located since its organization.

The new president is vice-president of the Iowa Bankers Association and one of the live wires of the Iowa banking field. He came to Des Moines as general bookkeeper in the Citizens National in 1895 from Laurens where he was assistant cashier for the First National. Since then, he has been connected with the Des Moines Savings as paying teller and the Central State as cashier. For some months, he was connected with the Union Mill Company at Cedar Falls but returned to Des Moines to organize the Mechanics in 1904.

Minneapolis banks report that their savings accounts have increased in number and volume about 25 per cent since the beginning of the year compared with the corresponding period of 1910.

Money Steady

In Chicago, as elsewhere, the money market has improved and is steady at a fractional advance. Commercial loans are at $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent and real estate 5 to 6. There is a little more life in mercantile trade than has been noted for several months. The principal demand for money is from the Western and Southwestern states.

The Bank of Willard, Ky., has been closed owing to a shortage of $14,000.

Des Moines, May 18.—President John McHugh and Secretary P. W. Hall of the Iowa Bankers Association completed a tentative draft of the program for the state convention at Mason City next month at a conference in Des Moines last week. An invitation has been extended to Franklin MacVeagh to address the bankers of Iowa and it is hoped that he will accept. An effort is also being made to secure John Barrett of Washington, director of the International Bureau of the Republic, but up to this time he has not accepted.

Prof. Laurence Laughlin of Chicago University has announced that he will speak on "Progress of Monetary and Banking Legislation."

Charles R. Frost, secretary of the Minnesota Bankers Association will speak on "Educational Reform in Minnesota."

James G. Berryhill of Des Moines will speak on "Bank Legislation."

E. R. Gurney, of Fremont, Neb., has consented to read a paper. There will be a series of twenty minute speeches. Those who will speak will be George M. Reynolds of Chicago, Charles D. Ellis of Mason City and Emerson DuPuy of Des Moines. It is probable that the program will provide for more speakers in this connection.

The entertainment features will be superb. It is proposed to spend a portion of the time at Clear Lake, one of the most attractive resorts in the Middle West. The bankers at Mason City are preparing to make the occasion one of especial delight. It is probable that Des Moines bankers will attend the convention in a special car.

Banks in Fine Condition

Auditor of State J. L. Bleakly told the bankers of Group Eight at Davenport last week that never before in the history of the state have Iowa state and savings banks and trust companies been in as good condition as at present. This situation, he explained, is due to the strict supervision and personal interest that is being given these institutions each year. He declared that it will continue to be policy to insist upon unequivocal obedience to the law no matter though it may seem drastic at times. The auditor declared that carelessness of managers and indifference of directors are often to blame when banks fall into bad lines. In speaking of his troubles, Mr. Bleakly said that he is constantly in controversy with men who are heavily interested in large banks and who own stock in smaller institutions which they wish to use as feeders for the larger central institutions? "Many times these deposits are switched to some national bank over which we have no control," said Mr. Bleakly. "We feel that the small bank owes the same responsibility to its depositors as does the city bank and it is our purpose to take care of the banks immediately under our jurisdiction and protect them in all possible ways." The group meeting was a success. John Reihman of Grand Mound was elected chairman. He has been secretary during the past term. F. L. Butzlof of Charlotte was made secretary.

Displeased at Assessments

Des Moines bankers have received their first assessments under the new law as passed by the recent legislature. To say they are displeased is putting it mildly. City Assessor James Parker under the terms of the new law has announced that the total assessment for the banks of Des Moines is $3,856,347. The last assessment under the old law placed the valuations at $1,175,886. Thus there is an increase of $2,680,461, about twice what the assessment was under the old law. Bankers regard this increase as unreasonable and it is certain that a bevy of law suits will follow.

One important item in the increased assessments is the tax on government bonds. Under the new state law, there are made assessable. Accordingly they were assessed by Mr. Parker. The total assessment on government bonds in the Des Moines national banks totaled $1,832,400. The savings bank assessment on bonds totals $1,026,950. The total of both is $2,859,350. It is the contention of bankers that the state legislature cannot thus arbitrarily make government bonds assessable. Accordingly a test case will be started at once, so leading Des Moines bankers assert.

The new law does not permit the deduction of individual indebtedness.

Bankers point out the injustice of forcing them to pay assessments on 80 per cent of the valuations whereas real estate is usually assessed at about one-third of its value or less.

"We are willing to pay our just taxes but it certainly is unjust to ask us to pay more than any other business man is paying," said C. H. Martin, president of the People's Savings. "It certainly cannot be constitutional. I imagine that there will be a strenuous legal protest raised at once."

Bankers have another complaint. Under the new law every bank in Des Moines filed a complete list of its stockholders together with the capitalization, the amount of stock owned by each, the par value and the face value. This list, filed with the assessor, has been regarded as public record and has thus been made public. Many bankers object to the publication of the list of their stockholders. There seems to be some dispute as to whether under the law bankers are compelled to file this list with the assessor. Des Moines bankers aver that they only filed them as an accommodation to Mr. Parker. Now that they have been given publicity, the bankers say they will not file them again. It is probable that this phase of the question will also be thrashed out in the courts.

New Postal Bank Successful

The Postal Savings Bank at Centerville is starting out more successfully than that at Decorah. At the end of the first week, the Centerville postoffice had $1,554 on deposit and fifty-three depositors. This is a better showing than at Decorah which has been in existence for three months and has only $722 on deposit and but 19 depositors. Centerville is in the center of a mining region where there are many foreigners who had often purchased money orders which they had held apparently preferring this method of preserving their funds.

TELLS OF THRIVING CITY

Cashier Chas. W. Coen of Merchants National, South Bend, Ind., was a visitor at Western Trust and Savings Tuesday. Mr. Coen told of the growth and thriftiness of South Bend, which is one of the strongest and wealthiest of inland cities. There has been a good demand for money all spring, owing to activity in manufacturing. Mr. Coen is a brother of Albert E. Coen of Western Trust.

State Banks of Texas valuable paper, the state laws controlling them before the big Dallas convention

Commissioner of Banking
Ben. L. Gill discusses in a

The state banks of Texas, if properly supervised, have come to stay, for they fill a place and a want and occupy a field of usefulness not heretofore taken by any other system of banks and there should be no feeling of antagonism between the state and national banks for each has its own mission and sphere of usefulness and a spirit of co-operation should exist between them. The state bank law of Texas went into effect August 25, 1905. Since that time there have been organized 750 banks, 79 of which have liquidated or consolidated with other banks. The guaranty of deposit law began operation August 12, 1909. All of these banks are contributors to the guaranty fund except 47 that are bond banks, that is to say, they have on deposit with the department bonds for the securing of their deposits amounting to $2,981,000.00. The credit to the guaranty fund is now $492,088.53, one fourth of which is in cash held by the state treasurer and the other three-fourths is to the credit of the state banking board deposited in the state banks contributing to, and whose deposits are guaranteed by this fund. When a new bank starts it pays in cash with its application one-fourth of three per cent of its capital stock and a duplicate deposit slip to the credit of the banking board for three-fourths. On the first day of November its average daily deposits are calculated on a basis of 1 per cent and each year thereafter they contribute one-fourth of 1 per cent on average daily deposits until the fund shall reach the sum of $2,000,000.00. Up to this time not 1 cent has been touched of this fund and I hope it never will be necessary to do so. Aside from this, the greatest of all safeguards for a bank, in my opinion, intelligent and active supervision is insisted upon by requiring each bank to be examined four times each year in addition to its sworn and published reports coincident with the calls of the national banks five times in each year. Like all new and practically untried laws, there is room for improvement in some respects but as a whole, it is a very good and a very satisfactory law and should not be touched or amended until we have become more familiar with its workings.

The called statement of January 7, 1911, showed 627 banks with a combined capital and surplus of $25,161,090.12 and total deposits of $62,212,183.12, loans and discounts $51,258,661.50, with an average reserve of 46 2/3 per cent and cash reserve of 12 per cent. Under the call of March 7, 1911, totals are as follows: Number of banks in operation 640, capital and surplus $25,970,419.69, deposits $60,800,862.74, loans and discounts $54,385,732.13. In the sixty days, net number of banks increased 13, increase of capital and surplus $809,329.57, decrease of deposits $1,411,320.38, increase loans and discounts $3,127,070.63. Some of my personal objections to the law are the restrictions in sections 6 and 7 defining what is a regular meeting and what can or cannot be done at regular meetings. For instance, it is not permitted an officer of a bank to borrow the funds of a bank unless it shall have first been authorized by a majority of the board (other than the borrower) at a regular meeting. Neither can a director borrow in excess of 10 per cent of the capital stock unless authorized in the same way at a regular meeting. If the bank desires to borrow money either by bills payable or rediscutions, such loan must first be approved at a regular meeting. Now every practical banker knows there are times when such matters cannot be delayed for thirty days and yet it is not a legal loan otherwise than as the law provides. I grant you this is sometimes done and where everything goes on all right no harm or inconvenience follows, but if a contest should arise serious complications might result. As it now stands it is the law and the commissioner insists upon its observance. I think also that the commissioner and banking board should have more power and discretion than the law permits with reference to authorizing new banks. Under our law permission is sometimes given to banks to proceed contrary to the business judgment of the board as it has no right under our constitution to say the field is supplied. No matter what conditions in that respect may be, it only has the right to judge its officers and directors and say whether or not in the judgment of the board they are proper persons to be entrusted with the business and property of that community. I have already invited much criticism from a certain element of promoters by discouraging their efforts in this direction. I have the personal satisfaction also of believing that I did so because I believed I was right, and that I was assisting in maintaining the integrity of the banking profession and protecting the interests of the community upon whom they had designs and the banking department from much unnecessary work and worry in the future. I have no ambition to see how many new banks can be added to the system during my incumbency but I do have a desire to see good, well-managed banks come in and assist those already in by becoming a credit to the department, a benefit to the community and profitable to their stockholders. I am firmly convinced that with proper supervision and the prestige of the guaranty fund behind the state banks and the same character of supervision and a proper organization of currency associations under the Aldrich-Vreeland act for the national banks such a thing as a panic will be rare if not totally impossible.

Now a word about supervision and its effects. Some complaint of the banking law is had in this connection. The president of one of our small and unsatisfactory banks, whom I had endeavored without success to persuade to obey the law and keep his bank in acceptable shape, was told he must resign or the bank would be taken over by the commissioner. He replied that he was arranging to get a national charter as he was tired of being examined so often. I wrote him I thought he was doing the right thing, that perhaps if he was fortunate enough to get a national charter he might reform. A few days later another party bought his stock and assumed his position and wrote me he had seen the correspondence and did not agree with his predecessor but would correct those things complained of and comply with the law and regarded the examinations as a good investment. The former president either was incompetent or dishonest, which, so far as results go in banking, are synonymous terms. I once had a director on my board, a very shrewd Jew, whose business opinion I valued very highly. One day in discussing a loan with him I said the intending borrower was honest but of little business ability; his reply was the best business maxim I ever learned. It was, "what is the difference if you lose your money by a fool or a rascal?" I believe again that supervision is desirable and necessary because where an officer is inexperienced but otherwise competent and anxious to learn, it is helpful to him to have the advice of the examiners and the department and it assists in correcting unlawful acts of those who know better. The three things that give us the most concern are: reserve, excessive loans to officers and directors, and in the stronger banks, the proper placing of its reserve. Some complaint is made that the required cash reserve of 10 per cent is too high. I do not think so except in rare instances and these are so few that they should not ask that the law be relaxed for their special benefit. Much trouble is experienced with the item of excessive loans. This is intensified in my judgment by reason of the fact that we have so many small banks in the system. The entire indebtedness of any one person in a state bank cannot exceed 25 per cent of its capital and certified surplus. This has reference to actual maker and endorsements. National banks can loan only 10 per cent of their capital and unimpaired surplus but can discount any amount of the customers' paper up to 30 per cent of its capital. Unimpaired surplus referred to of national banks is any amount they may have in surplus account that is not impaired by probable losses. Certified surplus as applied to state banks means that a bank cannot loan against its surplus account until it shall amount to 50 per cent of its capital and has been certified by the secretary of state upon application. Right here I want to impress upon the officers and directors of the state banks of Texas to defer the payment of dividends until they shall have built up a surplus fund of at least 50 per cent and have it certified. There is nothing you can do for your bank that will be so advantageous to it or will reflect so much credit upon its management as a substantial surplus account. The credit of your bank is more largely based upon this item than upon its capital. It reflects wholesome and conservative management. If you have reverses and losses (and they surely will come to you) you can meet them without impairment of your capital and when you need to borrow for your bank nothing recommends you so highly as your prudence and ability to accumulate it. You will pardon a personal reference when I tell you that the bank, of which I had had the honor of being an officer and director for more than twenty years, justifies me in stating that I have practiced what I preach in this respect and I am prouder of it to-day than of any other business result I ever hope to achieve. These thoughts I have given you are based on my experience in a bank not unlike the most of those conducted like your own, and I believe I understand your wants and your ambitions and, as commissioner of banking, I want to assist you in every possible way to make your bank a credit to its officers and stockholders as well as a credit to the department of banking. But you must also do your part to that end, study the law and endeavor to conduct your bank according to its provision and I promise to write you a letter of commendation after each examination for your efforts and offer you all possible assistance and encouragement. For the state banking law to be a success your bank must succeed and we must have the hearty co-operation of every honest and capable banker in Texas and the elimination of every dishonest and incapable man from the system. In my efforts to accomplish this, I shall not hesitate to demand the resignation of such officers and directors who continuously and wilfully violate the state banking laws. Such men are a menace to every bank and every community in this state and in view of the further fact that the interests of the state banks of Texas are so interwoven with each other by their mutual interests in the guaranty fund, where each bank stands sponsor for every other bank, it is not right, it is not just, that such men should be permitted to come into the system or to remain in it if already permitted to imperil the interest of those who are honest and competent and reflect credit upon the profession. These are my sentiments and I have no apology to make for expressing them. This policy will win in a country bank and it will win in a banking system if properly enforced. Let me conclude with an extract from an authority (Mr. Pratt)—"It should be remembered that integrity, force, ability, faithfulness, promptness, carefulness and courtesy tell in banking as well as in any other business. On the other hand, traits and conduct of the opposite character insure failure, but given the better qualities in good measure, in officers and clerks, success is assured. One specially important thing to bear in mind in banking is that new phases of business are constantly developing and the most successful and most useful bank is the one which most quickly adapts itself to the times. Do a straight-forward legitimate and upright business, and never be tempted by the prospect of large gains to engage in operations not sanctioned by prudence, or by the provisions of the laws."

William Little, aged 67 years, a banker of Northwest Oklahoma died last week.

HOFFSTOT IS ACQUITTED

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 18.—Frank N. Hoffstot, the banker-manufacturer of New York City, was acquitted on the charge of bribery in connection with the bank depository ordinance exposed in the councilmanic graft crusade. A week ago a jury disagreed in a case of conspiracy against Hoffstot. The bribery case went to the jury late this afternoon and the verdict was returned in a little more than an hour.

The case has been on trial two days, and after the failure of his attorneys to have the court instruct the jury to return a verdict finding him not guilty, Hoffstot went on the witness stand in his own behalf. He denied that he had any knowledge of the bribery of councilmen to pass the bank depository ordinance until after the exposure of the councilmanic scandal.

CHAPTER RECORD

An Open Forum Dedicated to the American Institute of Banking in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Systematic Education and Universal Membership

TACOMA CHAPTER

Competition is a keen edged tool and to keep clear of its blade advancement must be made with its demands. First the public were introduced to the one cylinder machine; this was followed by the two cylinder and to keep in the race the leading auto manufacturers have given to the public their highest practical work—the four cylinder.

Tacoma Chapter has offered its members meetings of the one cylinder and two cylinder type but each meeting of these classes, even at their best, suffered the cut of competition. This month the chapter officials felt they were in a position to produce the best ever and announced to the chapter members an up-to-the-minute four cylinder meeting.

Many times the chapter rooms have been filled very close to the limit at the monthly meetings but the May meeting brought into play the relay system of possessing a seat.

First was held the election of delegates to the national convention which left Geo. E. Dixon, assistant cashier Fidelity Trust Company and W. W. Newschwander, president of the chapter, wearing smiles that will have a chance to expand in giving and receiving greetings in Rochester.

Ellis Lewis Garretson, manager of one of the city's largest insurance agencies, but still one of the boys, was next given full charge and gave his lecture on "The Pyramids of Mexico" assisted by the stereopticon. The slides thrown on the screen were obtained by Mr. Garretson under great difficulties during a recent journey through Mexico and are not possessed by any lecturer in the country. As the pictures were shown Mr. Garretson kept up a running story, tracing the religious life of the people from the earliest period up to the present time. The good and evil periods were easily placed in the minds of his audience by the different types of architecture before them in the form of temples and the later cathedrals and churches. A number of interesting legends were recited which brought out many sides to the life of the Mexican people. The great Pyramid of the Sun was shown before it was uncovered by the government and in its now perfect state. It is said the removal of earth, rocks, and immense trees called for an expenditure of a million dollars. Two more pyramids will be exposed as soon as the money is available the larger of which is much greater in size than any so long made a part of everyone's knowledge of Egypt.

Bishop Keator's address on "The By-products of Life" was full of good thoughts and help to all, bringing forth a round of applause which means another night with the bishop if possible.

Last but not to be slighted came the supper served in the chapter rooms under the direction of the Hotel Tacoma management.

During the evening and while supper was being served the National Bank of Commerce quartette were on deck with selections many and of the sparkle which delights the man with ink on his fingers and Burroughs bruises.

ENTER THE CLEARING HOUSE

At a recent special meeting of Chicago Clearing House Foreman Brothers' Banking Company was admitted to membership. The bank has $1,000,000 capital and deposits of about $10,000,000.

This addition makes twenty members of the local clearing house, including the local assistant treasurer of the United States. There are six national and thirteen state banks and trust companies in the association.

KANSAS CITY CHAPTER

The Kansas City Chapter of the American Institute of Banking held its final meeting of the season last week. Following a dinner at the Coates House the following officers were elected: President, G. G. Moore of the New England National Bank; vice-president, D. A. McDonald, of the Fidelity Trust Company; secretary, A. B. Eisenhower of the Southwest National Bank, and treasurer, P. A. Adams of the Title and Savings Bank. The executive committee is composed of C. W. Allendoerfer of the First National Bank, J. M. Stilwell and Joseph T. Heydon of Houston, Fible and Company. A. B. Eisenhower and Jerome Thralls, manager of the Kansas City Clearing House were named as delegates to the national convention of the institute in Rochester, N. Y., September 8th. W. H. Potts is the first alternate.

BANK BUILDING'S BIG PROFITS

In its financial statement the National Safe Deposit Company, owner of the First National Bank Building, showed net profits of $347,262 for the year ended April 30th. This amount is equivalent to 13.9 per cent on the $2,500,000 capital stock.

The statement shows also that the directors have restored to the surplus account $1,000,000 of the $1,072,000 previously charged against that account and applied to the reduction of the book value of the real estate, building and leasehold. This book value has been marked up $1,000,000, or from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000.

The company has a surplus of $406,242 aside from the $1,000,000 restored to the account. This latter item, $1,000,000, will soon be charged over to capital. The stockholders will vote on June 13th to increase the capital by that amount, the new stock to be distributed as a stock dividend of 40 per cent.

ATSERVICE IN THE FIELD

John J. Arnold, manager foreign department of the First National, Chicago, is spending three or four weeks in the South, attending the Texas convention at Dallas, the Oklahoma convention at Oklahoma City and the Missouri-Kansas convention at Kansas City. Mr. Arnold is considered one of the ablest men in the North on the subject of financing cotton in relation to foreign exchange, having devoted years of study to this particular phase of the industry.

W. H. Monroe, assistant cashier of the First, Chicago, was a delegate to the Presbyterian General Assembly at Atlantic City, an honor testifying to the high standing of this Christian gentleman.

Group Two, Indiana Bankers Association, met in South Bend May 18th. Group Six will meet at Connersville May 26th.

SOUTH CHICAGO STATE BANK

State auditor has chartered the South Chicago State Bank; capital $200,000.

SUCCESSFUL GROUP MEETING

Davenport, Iowa, May 18.—The meeting of Group Eight of Iowa Bankers Association held here on the 11th inst., had many of the aspects of a state convention and set a new high-water mark for attendance at group meetings in Iowa. With 103 banks in this group, there was a registered attendance of 206 bankers.

The afternoon business meeting was replete with interesting features, the principal address of the day being delivered by Hon. John L. Bleakley, state auditor, who explained the workings of the state banking laws. Mr. Bleakley in his address brought out the interesting fact that for the past three years and six months there has not been a bank failure in Iowa,—a record which would be hard to surpass by any state in the Union.

Ernest R. Moore, one of the leading members of the last Iowa general assembly, told in detail of legislation affecting bankers passed during the recent session. The most important measure was that relating to the taxation of moneys and credits in Iowa, by the terms of which they will hereafter pay the nominal tax of 5 mills. Another important enactment of the recent legislature was the repealing of the tax ferret law, so that hereafter these subterranean "vermin" will cease to operate in Iowa. It is the general belief that the passage of these laws will do much to encourage the investment of outside capital in Iowa enterprises.

A number of resolutions were considered by the assembled bankers, the most important one of which was the following, offered by Hon. A. F. Dawson, president of the First National Bank of Davenport:

"Resolved, That Group Eight, Iowa Bankers Association, endorses the principles of the currency plan proposed by the chairman of the national monetary commission, and favors the enactment of these principles into law."

This resolution was adopted after an extended consideration.

The officers were elected for the ensuing year as follows:

President, J. W. Reihman of Grand Mound. Secretary, F. L. Butzloff, Charlotte.

The meeting closed with a banquet in the evening at the Commercial Club at which nearly 200 guests were present and the unanimous expression was that Davenport had added fresh laurels to her reputation for royal entertainment.

Hill, of the Second National Bank, is nominated for secretary, and A. T. Martin, of the Terminal Trust Company, for treasurer. The opposing ticket is headed by H. E. Hebrank, Union National Bank, for president, B. O. Hill, Second National Bank, secretary, and W. A. Royston, Jr., Fidelity Title and Trust Company, treasurer.

"THE YOUNG PITCHER" FOR BOYS

There is a new literature for boys, which is not made up of adventures purely as of yore. It is something better. Of this class in junior fiction Zane Grey is an accepted writer. Mr. Grey's "The Young Forester," among the best of the out West stories that boys delight in, has had a decidedly happy inspiration in his latest story, "The Young Pitcher." For some reason the characters and events of this tale have proved favorable to that vein of writing which we all recognize as typical of the best stories for boys, and all relish at whatever age.

Perhaps it would help to explain the phenomenon to say that the story has a great deal of atmosphere. The whole group of young men—college students—in "The Young Pitcher" are thoroughly alive, and their rivalries, likes, and dislikes are very real. There is not only adventure, but a very jolly kind of life, and that gives zest. This is as much as to say that the grown-up reader cannot well help yielding, however shamefacedly, to the fascination of it. Mr. Grey's story has a wealth of exciting incident and a happy way of causing just the appropriate thing to happen, without which it is to be suspected that not only boys but older readers would be somewhat disappointed. In other words, "The Young Pitcher" has just that touch of naïveté which is probably, after all, what we like most in things of the sort. For nothing could be worse than a half-hearted attempt in this vein. We want the genuine, full-flavored joyousness that belongs to the spirit of the thing.

WALSH PROPERTY LIQUIDATED

The Chicago clearing house committee has approved the sale of the Walsh coal properties which will give to the banks about $1,350,000 to be distributed in dividends on the series C certificates, issued at the time of the final settlement with Mr. Walsh. The original issue of the Walsh series C certificates was $9,149,464. From time to time dividends amounting to $5,077,397, or 55 1/2 per cent, have been paid. The balance due is $4,071,066.

H., S. & M. SHARES TAKEN

Hart, Schaffner & Marx' issue of $5,000,000 preferred and $15,000,000 common stocks met with a satisfactory reception in Chicago. It is understood that the insiders took $1,000,000 of the preferred and $12,000,000 of common stock. The underwriting syndicate took $4,000,000 of the preferred and the remaining $3,000,000 of common was divided in bonuses of 40 per cent to the underwriters of the senior shares and 60 per cent to Ladenburg, Thalmann and Company and A. G. Becker and Company, the firms that promoted the organization.

The company's sales last year were $15,234,507, and net profits were $937,381. The preferred will carry a 7 per cent dividend, while no dividend can be declared on the junior issue until there is a surplus of at least $500,000.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB, up Evanston way, had a galaxy of talent for the last Sunday meeting. The National Reserve Association plan was the topic and the speakers were Charles G. Dawes, Edward S. Lacey, David R. Forgan and Judge Orrin S. Carter of the Illinois supreme court.

WHEN you come to Chicago you can have a lady cabby, a lady barber, a lady boot-black and—next?

KANSAS is going a step further in the line of supervision and inspection by the banking commissioner. Not only private banks, but house bill No. 906 puts investment houses, local or foreign, under the strictest kind of supervision. The stock and bond business hasn't been very gay recently and probably this will not help much. Contracts with those for whom it would sell, and with those for whom it would buy, must be shown. In fact the bill is very drastic.

AMONG other things an investment firm or partnership, before obtaining the necessary license must sign an irrevocable consent to be sued by any one in any county of the state on the mere serving of a process on the secretary of state.

ANY mis-statements (fancy the wireless or air line companies going to Kansas, to say nothing of mining promoters) in circulars, will be punishable by both fine and imprisonment. The man who failed the other day on Wall Street for a million and a half with "no assets" probably will steer clear of Kansas for attempting to do a large business on small (or no) capital will be contrary to law.

CLAIMING that Hill, Armour or Patten are secretly behind the deal, when they are not, will get a term on the stone pile for the broker. Branches of houses located in other states are included in the supervisory powers. Even the method of keeping the books is prescribed.

CALIFORNIA invitations are out for their state convention at Lake Tahoe June 15th-16th-17th. W. H. High is president and R. M. Welch, secretary.

NEW YORK is after McDougal, chief examiner for the Chicago clearing house, to set up and conduct the same system in that city. The query is how old New York could keep in business without the aid of Chicago trained bankers and bank examiners.

TEXAS has a membership in her state association of 1,193, net growth of 100 for the year. Eight years ago the list totaled 570. Only 128 banks are going it alone, having refused all appeals to come in and pay dues.

IN Texas the district or group chairmen have been a great help in the membership battle, and in Texas, the non-member banks get too many association benefits. Iowa and other states tried out the good fellow plan but it failed. No service whatever should be given to banks which refuse to join and contribute toward expenses.

SECRETARY HOOPES has the full confidence of at least one Texas banker who recently wired him to "go up to the Capitol at once and have that bill killed." Hoopes responded at once but found the bill already "killed." This he kept to himself and thus has at least one constituent who tells how "me and Hoopes killed the bill."

TEXAS has a good protective department and spent $4,000 last year in running down bank crooks, handling in all 28 cases in which 21 arrests were made. The losses by member banks are growing less year by year. Chief Detective W. A. Boyd, thinks habitual forgers and bank crooks should go up for life.

UNDER that S. C. decision we are to have a sort of "justifiable restraint of trade" just as we have justifiable homicide. Get the view?

OLIVER C. FULLER, president of the trust company section, told the banqueters in New York, how the trust company section had increased in 15 years from seventeen to 1,100 members. He put the total number of trust companies at 1,800 with five billions in resources.

MR. FULLER advocated standardization as beneficial to all and this doctrine was well received by his hearers. That uniformity of trust company laws is quite as desirable as uniformity of banking laws was the "sense of the meeting."

CHENEY did a lot (as state banking commissioner) to bring on clearing house examinations in New York. He thoroughly demonstrated the inefficiency of state examination where big stakes are being played.

RUMOR has at that some of the New York trust companies will "stand pat" and remain out of the clearing house, and out from under its new and drastic plan of special examinations. This will give the public a chance to show its preference.

THE CARNEGIE, if still open, would be a stand patter!

GROUP SIX, Indiana, will meet at Connorsville, May 26th. Regular subpoenas were issued and lapel tags sent out in advance by Chairman Dan S. Perry, attested by Lucien Harris, secretary.

THE big New Orleans special is under way and readers of this column can get choice locations in compartments by applying direct to THE CHICAGO BANKER. Chicago banks take compartments three at a clip, so don't delay. There will be a "Presidential" car, a "Twin City" car, "Iowa" and perhaps a "Michigan" car.

HERE as how: G. M. Reynolds 2 drawing rooms, August Blum 2 compartments, Lucius Teter 3 compartments, Fletcher Farrell 2 compartments, H. E. Otte 2 compartments, John and Stoughton A. Fletcher 2 compartments, E. A. Hamill drawing room and 1 compartment, William Livingston, Frederick Kasten and Oliver C. Fuller each 1 drawing room. Then there is a long list of singles, enough to fill five cars. Will try to haul it all on one train if it takes four engines.

GRAHAM-LORIMER WEDDING

Ralph Richard Graham, son of Andrew J. Graham the banker, is to wed Elizabeth, the beautiful daughter of Senator William Lorimer on the 25th. Admission to the church will be by card. Social rumor has it that a handsomer couple, nor a more popular one, could not be found. Young Mr. Graham is cashier in Graham and Sons' bank of which his father is president and chief owner.

Trustees of the sanitary district have ordered payment of $148,966 to the Baltimore and Ohio for land it acquired along the south branch of the Chicago River by condemnation proceedings over a year ago. The litigation is now concluded.

ANOTHER JACK LONDON STORY

Surely Jack London is as prolific an author as the most sedulous reader could desire. Just a short time ago his "When God Laughs" was achieving such marked popularity, yet now he is publishing through the MacMillan Company (New York) a rousing tale, "Adventure." Despite the title his latest book is not a pure adventure story but contains a strong tincture of romance, romance minus stirring love scenes, owing to the very strong dislike of the heroine to everything bordering on the sentimental. It is about an Englishman, Dave Sheldon by name, all alone on his plantation on an island in the South Seas, in charge of several hundred man-eating blacks. To cap his perilous situation among a mutinous people he is taken ill with the pestilence and only by sheer strength of will conceals his condition from the natives which, if discovered, would mean his certain death at their hand. It is here that there appears very opportunely on the scene Joan Lackland, a shipwrecked American girl who, although very pretty, was almost masculine in her self-reliance and eagerness for adventure in spite of her recent narrow escape. That she nurses our hero back to health and then makes him repeatedly miserable by her to him unaccountable persistence in going swimming where there were sharks and doing equally perilous things, but at the same time makes his plantation a paying proposition, is only a part of the story. Adventures in plenty await them and, when an American, handsome and to Sheldon a very formidable rival is added to the personnel, still more exciting plots are concocted by the blacks. How this mere handful of whites, miraculously as it were, circumvent all the natives' designs, be it poisoned thorns or traps, and resist all attacks, while the latter, not so fortunate, suffer some loss of life, is told in Mr. London's most absorbing style. It is quite evident that this barbaric people are not mere creatures of fancy, and in this story, as in all others, he has shown his usual ability in portraying men, one of the characteristics which will always make his books worth reading.

membership in the Chicago Clearing House Association as soon as possible in order to be on an equal footing with other banks in the city," said he. "The Corn Exchange National Bank has been very kind to us and we have no complaint to make.

"When we first began clearing through the Corn Exchange National it was for six months, as a bank must go through a six months' probationship before it can be admitted to membership in the clearing house body under the rules of that organization.

"But the Corn Exchange has carried us for a year now, and we desire to gain a membership in the clearing house association in preference to this arrangement."

Senator Lorimer stated that he had no reason to doubt that the clearing house committee would act favorably on his application inasmuch as LaSalle Street National affairs were all that could be asked for. Other bankers stated that they could see no objection to having the application granted, it being desired that all who could qualify should join the clearing house. Many inquiries from outside bankers have come to Chicago houses this week, since the latest newspaper attacks, to learn if the LaSalle Street National was all right. Some very spirited answers were sent denouncing the newspaper insinuations and upholding the Lorimer institution.

Robert Lecouver, a banker of Westford, N. J., committed suicide by drowning.

New Orleans Train de Luxe

The Chicago committee in charge of the train de luxe to the New Orleans convention consists of the following well known Chicago bankers.

Ralph Van Vechten, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial National.

August Blum, vice-president of the First National.

H. E. Otte, vice-president of the National City.

J. Fletcher Farrell, vice-president of the Fort Dearborn National.

D. A. Moulton, vice-president of the Corn Exchange National.

W. G. Edens, assistant secretary Central Trust.

Reservations can be made through any of these committee-men or through the publisher of THE CHICAGO BANKER. Nearly seven cars have been taken already and still they come. Among the later arrivals are B. F. Harris, Champaign, Ill., who then will be president of the Illinois Bankers Association; Nelson H. Greene, Moline, and ex-president of the association and the new Illinois member of the Big Council; E. E. Crabtree, present head of the I. B. A.; E. J. Parker of Quincy; President Vogel and E. J. Hughes, First National; Fred Kasten, Wisconsin National and Oliver C. Fuller, Wisconsin Trust and J. H. Puelicher of the Marshall & Ilsley Bank, all of Milwaukee.

From Minneapolis Joseph Chapman, Jr., and George F. Orde and George C. Power of St. Paul. Reservations can be made through Mr. Chapman for the Northwest, or direct as desired.

The Iowa car has C. H. McNider, "right in the middle" and Arthur Reynolds next door. Don't put this off too long. R. T. Forbes, president of the First National, St. Joseph, Mo., has a drawing room. He is an Illinois-Iowa-Missouri banker—well known in all three. Then there are Gordon Jones, Denver, and A. H. Marble of Cheyenne. All Chicago banks are in.

Banking Opinion

Festus J. Wade, of St. Louis, chairman of the special committee of the A. B. A. currency commission, sees no reason why all state institutions, trust companies, banks, savings banks and mutuals cannot come in on the same terms as national banks as members of the proposed National Reserve Association.

Mr. Wade says the new scheme provides that state banks and trust companies may, without nationalizing, become members of the National Reserve Association, under practically the same conditions as the national banks and that it is to be provided:

"That a bank or a savings bank which is incorporated under the laws of any state, in accordance with the requirements of which it has been examined and has published statements of its condition, or, in the absence of such requirements of state laws, upon approval of the executive committee of the National Reserve Association, may subscribe to the capital stock of the National Reserve Association in the same manner and under the same conditions as prescribed for national banks, and such subscribing bank shall become a member of a local association and have the same rights and privileges therein as if it were a national bank; provided:

"That it shall have a paid-in capital of not less than that required for a national bank in the same location.

"That it shall have and agree to maintain against its demand deposits a reserve of like character and proportion required of a national bank in the same location; provided, however, that deposits which it may have with a state bank, a savings bank, or a trust company, in a city designated in the national banking act as a reserve city or central reserve city, whose paid-in capital is not less than the minimum amount required for a national bank in such city, and, in the case of a trust company, not less than that hereinafter specified for a trust company in such city and which is a member of a local association, shall count as reserve in like manner and to the same extent as similar deposits of a national bank with national banks in such cities.

"Provided further that liabilities for deposits payable beyond thirty days and for savings deposits subject to notice of sixty days

Mr. Broeksmit is the new cashier of the Harris Trust and Savings Bank of this city, and, like a lot of other good Chicago bankers, came from Iowa. He was cashier of the Merchants National at Cedar Rapids. The Harris Trust has increased its surplus to $1,500,000 and will shortly increase the capital to a like amount. This surplus, equal to the capital, has been earned in four years.

or more, shall not be subject to the reserve requirements provided for demand deposits.

"That it shall agree to submit to such examinations and comply with such requirements as may from time to time be prescribed by the National Reserve Association."

The same condition, practically, will apply to the other classes of banks and to trust companies.

TENNESSEE BANKERS TO MEET

Memphis, Tenn., May 24.—The annual convention of the Tennessee State Bankers Association will be held in Nashville on May 29th and 30th. Most of the local bank officials are members of the association and a large delegation will attend from Memphis. Dwight M. Armstrong, cashier of the Commerce Trust & Savings Bank, is the retiring president. J. D. McDowell, of this city, is vice-president for West Tennessee. Wesley Drane, of Clarksville, is chairman of the executive council and in line for promotion to the presidency. The sessions will be held at the new Hermitage Hotel. Among the important papers to be read at the meeting will be one on the Aldrich plan for monetary legislation, by John Perrin, of the Fletcher Bank of Indianapolis, and an address by William Livingston, president of the Dime Savings Bank of Detroit, who is also vice-president of the American Bankers Association.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

JUST as we told you, the decision had no effect whatever—not on the price of oil or gasoline.

EDENS will be on more programs this year than any other Chicago banker. He addressed a congress of historical societies the other day where the next youngest man present was 79. You can't keep a good man down!

JOHN SCHUETTE'S Oklahoma address is one of the best of the year. It was along the main traveled roads of his recent years of active advocacy of deposit guaranty and pleased the Oklahomans immensely.

EVERY group meeting date for Illinois has now been set and the only remaining thing to do is to get ready to attend. Every big, loyal, Illinois bank will send a representative to every meeting.

HONESTLY, don't you think the limit of decency has been reached when a partisan paper attempts to start a run on a bank to further the political plans of some of its owners? Little wonder that favorable comment by such a paper will kill a bill in the legislature. Black-hand journalism is its proper description.

SECRETARY W. B. HARRISON of Oklahoma reported but 53 non-members in the state and total receipts in the secretary's office of $7,305.23. The Oklahoma Banker, an official publication, shows a profit. "The expense of publication was paid out of general fund." The membership is 85.

THE official report states: "It was to be expected that when the secretary began devoting all his time to the work the earnings of the office would increase, and when the present secretary took the position it was stipulated that he should work for the association only. The results are herewith submitted. The earnings of the office outside of dues have more than doubled."

DO you remember what a long time it took to get the Illinois association even to consider a paid secretary? Poor old constitution, how many reforms were sacrificed to thy cruelties!

SECRETARY HARRISON also reported that "Five bank burglars and thirteen swindlers have been convicted and sentenced this year. Three others are now facing trial and officers are trailing four who have fled to other states. The protective work has been made more effective by a co-operative agreement between the bankers associations of Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. This department's activities can be successful only as members of the association endeavor to co-operate with the secretary's office when called upon to do so. There is need of improvement along this line."

THIS progressive Oklahoma secretary also says that "Eight months' experience in the office of secretary leads me to say that this office offers a very large field of endeavor and constantly increasing opportunities to uplift the banking interests of the state and to advance those great industrial enterprises on the prosperity of which the success of the banks largely depends. The field is bounded only by one's ability and energy. To the officers of the association and to the hundreds of members who have given me loyal support I desire to express my sincere appreciation and gratitude."

THIS is the proper view of the office. It is wrong to try to appropriate the functions of the elective officials, as some do, but there is plenty of important work for any state secretary to do if he faces forward.

PROFESSOR A. C. SCOTT in welcoming the bankers to Oklahoma City said: "And no business is at once more honorable and more honored than the business of the banker. I hardly know, indeed, whether to call it a business or a profession. Perhaps I may safely compromise by calling it a business profession. And I repeat that it is both honorable and honored. The family banker runs a close race with the family physician in the confidence of his patrons. It is a pleasant feature of our business life, of which I hope you gentlemen are duly appreciative, that every well regulated citizen refers with pride and affection to 'my bank' or 'my banker.' And this confidence is, in the main, absolutely justified."

"I GIVE it as my deliberate opinion that there is no body of our business men which, in honorable dealing, in high standards of integrity, and in strict fidelity to the trust reposed in it, ranks higher than the bankers of our country; and within our own borders the same may be asserted of the bankers of our state. Character is, indeed, the very corner stone of the business. You may make as many guaranty laws as you please, but the trust of the people rests in the end upon the character and the capacity of the man behind the bank."

THIS ought to help some. In the last political campaign, in Oklahoma, some less kindly things were said.

CASUALTY rates are to go up anywhere from 15 to 1.015 per cent by an agreement between about sixty companies. This is the record for hold-up boosts in prices. Even as prices were, the going dividend rates were about 40 per cent.

WOULDN'T it be fine to have George E. Roberts for comptroller, if Murray is to quit? He's the type of man every banker in the country could endorse. Murray has been offered the presidency of a big Pittsburgh bank and probably ought to accept. He's earned his spurs.

FIFTY new postal banks go into commission soon, one at DeKalb, Ill. They haven't hurt the banks as some feared and yet may increase the "visible" supply of coin.

EUGENE SCHMITZ, the former labor-graft mayor of San Francisco invested all of his ill-gotten wealth in Mexico and now is broke. 'Twas ever thus.

EASTERN financial papers generally commend the Standard Oil decision—even those on the subsidy list.

MEXICAN investments will have a new "talking point" when Diaz steps out. If you want a "fixed" investment it will do pretty well. For a fixed income try something else.

LAST year Secretary Keyser reported one non-member bank, although it had joined after the printed report was out, on the very eve of the St. Louis convention. Now there are 47 new banks and 47 new members were reported at the Kansas City meeting. This is a great record and it all is accomplished so quietly, modestly and easily that the other secretaries look at the Missouri wizard and wonder how.

THE Missouri total is 1,320 which includes brokers and non-residents in addition to the 1,294 banks of all kinds in the state. Commissions earned by the secretary's office for the year amounted to $9,112.03 and plus the annual dues makes up a fine business statement.

MR. KEYSER apparently believes that some of the sheriffs do not care to meet a desperate criminal, even after the state association has offered a big reward. With them it is a case of "Let George do it." He believes fully in the protective system now in use which combines the offering of large rewards and the hiring of good detectives. Only seven safes were broken in Missouri banks last year and all of them were of the old fashioned, square-door variety.

OF the 23 cases of fraud upon banks Mr. Keyser believes that a majority were due to pure carelessness on the part of the banks doing business with strangers. In the cashing of worthless drafts and checks Mr. Keyser brands it as "sheer carelessness," and who is there to deny it? The cases of loss after due precaution are few.

MISSOURI has nearly fifteen million in bonds in force and is meeting fierce competition in rates. Loyalty of members is shown by their sticking by the association. Thornton Cooke, chairman of the bank taxation committee, is given much credit for work done and results accomplished.

THERE was but one bank failure in Missouri in the past year—the Bank of Tipton. The state banking department took charge and paid out in full in 60 days. No need of bank guaranty in a state like that. A fine banking law, carefully and fearlessly administered does the trick. Not a depositor lost a dollar.

TWO Chicago detectives, Timothy O'Brien and John Duffy, got $200 good Missouri money last July for arresting J. C. Hardbeck for defrauding St. Joseph bankers. Rewards do work when they are known to be payable in cash.

P. F. MCCARTHY & COMPANY, private bankers, Chicago—same old story.

Big joint meeting with speakers of National reputation held at Kansas City by the two State Associations

Kansas City, May 25.—The joint convention which has been in session in the two Kansas cities for the past two days had such a large attendance that it easily will rank second only to the national convention to be held in New Orleans this fall. The Missouri bankers' program always provides fine entertainment for those who attend, and even when there is no added attraction the crowd at a Missouri convention is one of the largest of all meetings held by the state association. This year the Kansas bankers held their convention in Kansas City, Kansas, beginning yesterday morning, and the Missouri bankers opened their proceedings at the same time at Kansas City, Missouri. One very interesting joint session was held at which the attendance was limited only by the capacity of the hall.

The Missouri Program

The Missouri convention was called to order promptly at ten o'clock Wednesday morning in the Wood Theatre by President A. O. Wilson of St. Louis. There was a prayer by Rev. J. B. Silcox, and a ringing address of welcome by the reform mayor of Kansas City, D. A. Brown, and on behalf of Kansas City clearing house a further welcome was extended by President J. F. Downing of that institution. President Wilson of the state association combined a response on behalf of the delegates with his annual address covering the banking situation in the state for the past year. Reports were read by Secretary W. F. Keyser and by Treasurer R. R. Calkins. A large crowd was in attendance eager to hear the famous Nebraska banker-orator, E. R. Gurney of Fremont. His address and others will be found printed elsewhere in this edition of THE CHICAGO BANKER.

The morning session closed with reports of the group chairmen which included the naming of places for the next group meetings and for selecting a member of the nominating committee from each one of the groups.

Missouri-Kansas Joint Meetings

The big event, naturally, of the first day session was the joint meeting held by the delegates from Kansas and Missouri at eight o'clock in the evening. President J. F. Downing of the Kansas City Clearing House called the meeting to order and presided. The distinguished David R. Francis, an ex-governor of Missouri, delivered an oration upon "Kansas from the View-point of a Missourian." Honorable W. J. Bailey, an ex-governor of Kansas, retorted in kind, taking for his subject, "Missouri from the View-point of a Kansan." These interesting features of the joint session were immediately followed by a short address by Secretary Franklin MacVeagh of Washington, and a very brilliant, sparkling oration by President F. O. Watts of the American Bankers Association, taking for his subject the grand organization of which he is the head. This joint session, socially and oratorically, will long be remembered in the two states most concerned.

The Session of Thursday

The Thursday morning Missouri session began at ten o'clock with reports of the group secretaries, giving details of the various meetings the afternoon before. Then there was the auditor's report supporting those made by the secretary and treasurer at the previous session. Byron W. Moser, an ex-president of the St. Louis chapter, A. I. B., spoke on institute matters and gave way to Judge Charles E. Lobdell of Larned, Kansas, who delivered a philosophical oration upon the subject "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" Judge Lobdell also is president of the First State Bank of Larned and an interesting talker. "International Commerce" was the title of a well prepared paper by Honorable Wm. H. Burges of El Paso, Texas.

Chairmen of the following committees reported the progress made during the year as follows: Thornton Cooke on taxation; J. A. Lewis on bills of lading; W. P. Kennett on rewards; and W. C. Harris on legislation. Immediately following the morning session, members of the American Bankers Association held a meeting to elect a delegate as a member of the nominating committee of the next A. B. A. convention and to elect a member of the A. B. A. executive council to take office at the New Orleans convention.

Afternoon Session

The convention meeting of the second day opened with an address on "Some Recent Legislation" by Judge I. P. Ryland of Kansas City. Following the address of Judge Ryland, the convention took up the following legal questions for open discussion:

1. What are the duties and liabilities of bank directors?
2. To what extent is a bank liable for transfer of stock or payments of deposit of a deceased non-resident without the estate of such decedent being administered under the laws of Missouri?

3. What is the best form of promissory note for bank use?

This discussion was followed in rapid order by the report of the committee on nominations, election, and installation of officers, and adjournment. Immediately after adjournment the new council of administration, composed of the association officials and group chairmen, elected for the year, held an executive session in the committee room of the Hotel Baltimore.

Social Features of the Convention

For weeks in advance of the convention, there had been at work in Kansas City a reception committee under the chairmanship of E. F. Swinney; an entertainment committee under the chairmanship of G. S. Hovey; a ladies' committee under the chairmanship of W. S. Webb; and a committee on reception of speakers headed by H. C. Flower. The working force of these committees was composed of the leading bankers and members of the Kansas City Clearing House, and the results show the care and attention which had been bestowed upon their respective tasks. In every invitation issued by these committees and by the Kansas City Clearing House, the delegates of both state conventions were included. On Wednesday at 1 P. M. the speakers, members of the council, officers, and ex-presidents of both state associations were entertained at luncheon at the Hotel Baltimore. At three o'clock all attending delegates were taken to Association Park to witness a game of professional base ball. Special entertainment had been provided for the ladies by the committee. On Thursday evening there was a grand entertainment at Electric Park for which both tickets and transportation were furnished to everyone. Visitors had the exclusive use of the German Village located in the park where a fine German lunch was served and a splendid vaudeville performance presented. This luncheon adjourned at 11 o'clock (P. M.), after which the guests had free admission to all the concessions, and to a dance which was given at that hour in the dance pavilion which had been reserved for the exclusive use of delegates and visitors. Free telephone service was provided within the limits of both states.

Features of the Kansas Meeting

The Kansas bankers met on Wednesday morning at ten o'clock in the Masonic Temple, Kansas City, Kansas. Judge Richard J. Higgins welcomed the visitors and W. Y. Morgan of Hutchinson responded. President W. H. Burks then delivered his annual address, and was followed by a very interesting talk on "The Times" by the Honorable J. N. Dolley, bank commissioner. These three addresses completed the morning session and the afternoon was given up to visiting and recreation in company with the delegates to the Missouri convention as above mentioned. In the evening the Kansas delegates attended the joint convention mentioned in one of the former paragraphs.

Kansas Convention: Second Day

The second day session of the Kansas meeting convened in the Masonic Temple and heard several splendid addresses. The Honorable Scott Hopkins of Topeka took for his subject "The Country Banker the Community Counselor." He was followed by the Honorable J. P. Hinton of Hannibal, Missouri, an ex-president of the Missouri association, on "Proper Functions of a Bankers Association." Following this came a symposium participated in by national bank examiners. The subject was "Things Revealed in Bank Examinations Most Commonly the Subject of Criticism."

At the afternoon session there were a long list of five minute addresses as follows: "Every-day Problems" by J. C. Broadley, cashier Citizens Bank, Weir City; "Protective Features" by Geo. W. Snyder, cashier Topeka State Bank, Topeka; "The Identity of State and National Bank Interests" by J. H. McNair, president of The Halstead Bank, Halstead; "Our Schoolmasters" by R. M. Sawhill, cashier of Farmers State Bank, Blasco; "Who Runs the Bank" by W. A. Cooney, cashier First National Bank, Mayetta; "Days Off" by M. H. Malott, president Citizens Bank, Abilene; "The Long and Short of it" by Geo. T. Guernsey, Jr., vice-president Commercial National Bank, Independence; "The Value of an Account" by F. J. Atwood, president First National Bank, Concordia; "Our New Competitor" by Jno. R. Lindburg, president First National Bank, Pittsburg; "'Thank You' Services" by C. G. Cochran, president First National Bank, Plainville; "Dignified and Undignified Bank Advertising" by T. B. Brown of Shawnee B. & L. Association, Topeka; and "With Lindburg at Los Angeles" by P. I. Bonebrake, vice-president Central National Bank, Topeka, and the meeting closed with the reports of the secretary and treasurer, and of several committees.

Quite a feature of the Kansas meeting was the singing of special songs written for the occasion at each of its sessions. On the evening of Thursday, the delegates joined those of Missouri and visited Electric Park.

Building and Loan Section

Kansas Bankers Association has a section known as the Building and Loan Section which meets each year on one of the days of the state convention. This year they had quite an important program including the following subjects by the speakers as named:

"A Forward Movement for the Building and Loan Association of Kansas" by J. C. Christensen, Manhattan Building & Loan Examiner; "Impelling Motives" by Fred A. H. Garlicks, St. Joseph, Mo., president Missouri State League; "The Advantages of Weekly Payment Stock" by A. J. Applegate, Wichita, secretary Wichita Perpetual B. & L. Association; "The Law and the Gospel" by Hon. Wm. Needles, Kansas City, attorney for the Gibraltar; "The New Building & Loan Law of Kansas" by Robert Misell, Concordia, secretary Concordia B. & L. Association; "The Relation Between the Moral Hazard and the Physical Value in a B. & L. Loan" by C. S. Hartough, Leavenworth, secretary Citizens Mutual B. & L. Association; "What I don't Know about the Building and Loan Business" by C. B. Dodge, Salina, secretary Homestead B. & L. Association, and the question box in which written questions deposited in the box were read, answered and discussed.

One of the Speakers

One of the speakers was William H. Burges, a distinguished lawyer and peace advocate from El Paso, Tex. His topic was "Internation-

Commercial Commerce." He said in part: "It has uniformly been held that banking is not commerce, within the meaning of the constitution; that one dealing in foreign bills of exchange is not engaged in foreign commerce, within the meaning of the constitution, and, therefore, you, as bankers are especially interested in interstate and international commerce only as it affords you ampler fields for your activities, and as you meet and discharge a function indispensably incident to such commerce.

"I think it may safely be assumed that your primary interest is that the investment of the funds you, as bankers advance, be safe, the demand adequate to the supply at your disposal and the handling of the transaction reasonably simple and expeditious.

"We have laughed at the statement that the cackle of a Kansas hen is heard around the world, but the jest expresses an important truth. So closely has the increased interchange of commodities brought the people of all the nations, so inseparably has the dependence of the industries of one people on the products of another brought the nations of the earth together, that we could not sunder them if we would. The attack of the cotton worm and the boll weevil on the fleecy product of our southern fields bodes more of evil to the people of England than the darkest war cloud on her international horizon. International trade, the application, on a larger scale, of the world-old law of supply and demand, has brought us most forcibly to realize that "In the gain or loss of one race,

All the rest have equal claim."

"The enormous figures in which the foreign commerce of our country is now stated, alone would indicate it a matter of first importance. The fact that every dollar that pays for our imports goes out through American banks, and that all that comes in from our even greater exports is bank paper at some stage of the journey from consumer to producer—in fact during most of that journey—is enough to interest American bankers in that commerce, and especially you, the bankers of a great producing and exporting state.

"Not only must international trade be made secure and orderly, but it must be just. I am sure I do not misjudge this association when I say that the enterprises to which you lend your aid must, in a larger way, be just, as well as certain. Doubtless no member of this association could be found whose attitude towards any proposition calling for his assistance would be that of a famous Chancellor of the British Exchequer to one of the foremost educators of Colonial America. When Dr. Blair went to England to obtain money to establish a college in Virginia, and approached the Chancellor, Sir Edward Seymour, for assistance from the treasury, he met a curt refusal. 'You must not forget,' said Dr. Blair, 'that our people in Virginia have souls to save as well as people in England.' 'Souls!' echoed Seymour in derision, 'Damn your souls! Grow tobacco.'

"No unattainable ideal is demanded. I am not unmindful of what has been spoken on the subject by one of the great English judges of the last century—the late Chief Justice Coleridge. He said:

"It is a self-evident truth that the closer the commercial relationship, the more numerous the ties of common interest between two nations, the greater will be the reluctance of one to begin war upon the other, the more willingly will they listen to the appeal of reason to submit their differences to impartial arbitration, and substitute for their waste of war the conserving processes of impartial justice."

In Conclusion

"Before closing I will briefly review the different reforms proposed to remedy our banking system.

"First. It was asset currency, which soon ran its course. Then it was branch banking; this, too, got a black eye when last fall one bank in London failed with some thirty-four branches, then one in New York, with eighteen branches, and then one in Toronto with thirty-one branches. These and the Carnegie Trust Company failures, so quietly and mysteriously caused the withdrawal of deposits in the enormous amount of 190 million dollars, that it puzzled the financial world; this settled too much branching.

"Then came the central banks, but as everything centralized is most obnoxious to the people, this too, was discarded, so much so, that the mighty Aldrich dared not use the term and misnamed his new plan, imported from Europe, and in imitation of an imperial bank clothed in royal robes, as a 'Reserve Association.'

"The primary object of all these measures it is pretended, will cure our currency. The idea! Is there anyone in this or any other country who in the least doubts the safety of our currency. This needs no remedy, as it is the soundest in our whole financial system, and the remedy prescribed will only weaken and may kill it.

"And the other proposed remedy to be applied to our banking system is to facilitate the expansion of credits. This would the more arouse suspicion and undermine confidence, just what is most important not to impair.

"It would act just like a business man, the more he gets into debt, the more he would impair his credit. Well, I need not waste my time on all these measures, and predict that any of these plans will ever be adopted.

"The only other measure coming from an official source was Mr. Fowler's last bill, under which all banks could easily nationalize, as the banks are allowed to receive saving deposits and do other various financial transactions which, owing to the diversity of business would be safeguarding them. But the best feature in it is, that it puts the notes and deposit liabilities all in one class and insures all of the deposits of each bank into a general insurance fund, 5 per cent gold of its note and deposit liabilities. This is an ideal plan, and that it has not been more favorably considered is because Mr. Fowler lost his prestige when he first launched his asset currency measure. The plan is easy of execution without disturbing the popular individual banking system,

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED

President A. O. Wilson to Missouri Bankers

It now becomes my duty to bring to the members of the Missouri Bankers Association in convention assembled, the annual address of the president. I am glad indeed to be able to report that the organization never was in a more prosperous condition. Such a condition is not due alone to the service rendered by the official family. The loyalty of the entire membership is worthy of special mention in this connection. Failure is impossible with such a combination. Reference to the official family and the work which they have accomplished enables me to pay a just tribute to the one officer to whom in largest measure is credit due—to our incomparable secretary (hear! hear!) who, with his most faithful office force, has rendered the membership such splendid service. It is a pleasure indeed to pay this tribute, expressed year after year by retiring presidents, but so well deserved and so modestly received. We have another annual statement to make in reporting a continued solid membership. Such an accomplishment is almost unparalleled in the history of organization life; therefore pardonable in mention on this occasion. This achievement is not without attendant labor. The fact that the membership must be renewed each year establishes the necessity of an annual campaign on the part of the association and group officers. While 90% of the banks of the state renew promptly, there are always a number who do not do so, and in such cases it often becomes necessary during these closing days of the year for the officers and members to do everything in their power within proper limits to bring the delinquent members into the fold. It is well that we are members from year to year. It serves as a stimulus to all of us, for in the renewal of our memberships we are brought in closer contact with the active life and work of the organization, an organization which was established on a good basis, yes, upon a high basis, for it was at Lebanon, one of the highest points in the Ozarks, that the association was organized in 1891.

We trust you will realize that it is a special privilege to be permitted to join in this, the twenty-first annual convention of the Missouri Bankers Association. We have reached our majority. We have come into our own. We are certainly entitled to all the privileges of a general franchise, the franchise of achievement and accomplishment, the franchise of growth and progress, the franchise of good fellowship, and all that goes with it. Worthy achievement calls for honorable mention and recognition. We have no complaint in that connection. Recognition has come to us as an organization in the fullest measure, and we are satisfied. We realize, however, the responsibilities resting upon us, and we must endeavor earnestly to measure up to same.

It seems to us that it would be appropriate on this occasion to mention briefly some of the facts in connection with the continued growth and progress of our association since the Lebanon convention. You were given a general idea as to the growth of the association for the last ten years in the figures submitted in our response to the address of welcome, those figures indicating a growth of over 140% in that period. The progress of the association during the preceding ten years was in about the same proportion. The finances of the association, as well as the membership figures, furnish an interesting exhibit. When we assembled at St. Joseph ten years ago we had a cash balance on hand of $5,638.77, the revenue (Continued on page 12)

Oklahoma Convention

Remarkable address by John Schuette of Wisconsin a feature. Fine program of speaking and social events

Oklahoma City, May 23.—The fifteenth annual convention of the Oklahoma Bankers Association, which convened in this city yesterday morning, has in all respects been a record breaker. The attendance was the largest, the program the best, and the entertainment eclipsed anything ever before offered in this state. The meeting was called to order promptly at 9:30 in the Overholser Opera House by President J. B. Ferguson. A. C. Scott welcomed the visitors to Oklahoma City, and President Ferguson delivered his annual address which reviewed conditions in the state and general financial matters in a very entertaining way. Treasurer J. M. Browning and Secretary W. B. Harrison reported. The secretary's report was placed in neat printed form in every seat in the convention hall and it set forth the conditions of the state association in a very attractive way.

A great deal of interest was manifested in the reports of the group secretaries. F. W. Smith of Lawton, Joseph Dvorak of Renfrow, C. D. Rorer of Shawnee, C. D. Davis of Claremore, and B. A. McKinney of Durant reported for the groups from one to five, respectively. This was followed by an address delivered by George B. Harrison, Jr., of Kansas City, reviewing Southwest banking conditions and one of the very best papers ever delivered under similar circumstances. It was printed practically in full in the last issue of THE CHICAGO BANKER, as presented at the Texas convention. At the noon hour the A. B. A. members held their meeting.

Tuesday Session

At the Tuesday morning session President Ferguson opened the question box for half an hour and presided over a most interesting opening feature. Next came the address on "The National Reserve Association Plan" by C. S. Allendoerfer of Kansas City who was followed by A. B. Grant of Dallas, the national expert, on his favorite topic, "The New Transit System." This was followed by routine reports of committees and the election of officers. In the afternoon of Tuesday the state bankers section held a meeting and heard addresses by I. H. Nakdimen of Sallisaw on "Protecting State Banks"; by Hon. John Schuette of Manitowoc, Wisconsin, on "Deposit Guaranty;" by the Hon. Lee Cruce, governor of Oklahoma; by J. C. McClelland of the state banking board, and by State Senator Roddie of Ada. A free for all discussion closed the session of this section.

J. B. FERGUSON

The Social Features

The entertainment committee provided a great many feature events which rendered the visit to Oklahoma City by outside guests and delegates quite memorable. There was an adding machine contest at 2 o'clock on Monday, and an automobile ride at the same hour over the city, intended chiefly for the ladies. The objective point was a reception at the home of Mrs. Frank P. Johnson. At 3:30 there was a ball game at the professional park, and at 7:30 in the evening all attractions at the State Fair Grounds Park were thrown open to the visiting bankers. Tickets for everything to be seen were neatly bound up in pass books which were furnished to the visitors. On Tuesday there was a luncheon at the new stock yards immediately following the business session of the convention. Cars were waiting to take all visiting bankers and their guests. After the luncheon, visitors were shown through the yards and packing plants. This part of the entertainment was in charge of the officials of the Oklahoma Stock Yards National Bank and the various packing companies interested. At the close of this entertainment, the cars containing the delegates were run over the entire lines of the transportation company, showing the visitors all of the remarkable features of the coming metropolis of the Southwest.

to one of her conventions. Well, he came this time, and was the central figure in an important company. Naturally a part of his address was made up of matter which he has heretofore furnished to the readers of THE CHICAGO BANKER. He made an emphatic hit and said in part:

About six years ago I was invited by Cashier E. B. Cockrell, who had read some of my articles on deposit insurance, to address the bankers of Oklahoma on this subject. Oklahoma! Where is it? I had to search for it on the map and asked some one what he knew about Oklahoma. He asked, "What do you want with Oklahoma?" I told him that I had been invited to address the bankers of Oklahoma on deposit insurance. "Why," said he, "Oklahoma is away down southwest, a hot, wild and woolly country, where a man must take his life in his own hands, especially when he gets into a dispute. You had better address them on insuring human life rather than on paltry dollars. At all events if you go, by all means be sure to insure your own life."

As a banker, who has so often had his fingers burnt, is apt to be shy and timid, and a stickler for having everything secured, I hesitated and concluded it would be better to postpone my visit until after Oklahoma had cooled down and become civilized. So I sent an army of 1,000 substitutes in the form of booklets which Mr. Cockrell agreed to drill and march to the front under his generalship. I thought if these are shot to pieces it can not harm me, being safe in the rear. And it seems that these little substitutes valiantly fought for the cause and conquered, far better than if I, as a lone missionary, had taken the field. Since then

Six years have passed
And oh, how vast Has Oklahoma grown.

At which the Oklahomans are naturally overjoyed. Uncertain themselves as to their fabulous success and progress I am again invited to come and confirm the reality and share the joy with them. I need not now search for Oklahoma on the map. It is known all over the globe and especially by the financiers who watch it with great interest because it has blazed the way for the safest banking system on earth, which will be finally adopted by all states, and the nation, and who knows if not by other countries.

There is nothing since the birth of our country that will give so much relief to our people as absolutely safeguarding their moneys and eliminating bank panics. Your attempt in this regard has advertised Oklahoma more than anything else could have done. When your secretary, C. D. Rorer, invited me to appear at this bankers' convention and talk on deposit guaranty, I asked him whether this subject, having been threshed out so much, would not prove uninteresting to some bankers. He admitted that it might, but gave me the option to speak on any other matter. So I shall dwell briefly on this subject and review what the plan has so far disclosed.

The law set out to protect depositors, to prevent recurring bank panics, to induce bankers for their own protection to aid in having safer laws, stricter administration, more thorough examinations, and, in brief, practice safer banking. All of which the law has completely vindicated. Has it not been a success? Assuredly it has. The law did not intend to guarantee the cost of insurance based on the experience of past losses in the whole country. Unfortunately your loss has been far above the average, and may have been disappointing to some.

The reasons for this are easily found when we consider that the plan was first tried out in a new state, where everything is done on a more hazardous way than in older states. But the most disadvantageous feature of all was that the plan was adopted in a single state, by which the most essential element of any kind of insurance, namely, a good general average, is not so immediately attained.

If the plan would be operated over a larger territory, like the entire nation, the loss would be normal, while in Oklahoma it was far above it and in Texas far below it, as it has not lost a dollar on its guaranty so far. Nevertheless, the average loss will also be attained by a single state, but not so soon as by all states or by a nation.

All insurance companies are subject to spasmodic losses. As in nature, after a storm we have a calm, after rain, sunshine, and thus, as you have had your storms at the beginning, we may expect better weather from now on, and especially when you will have in addition the experience which has disclosed to you the weak spots which will enable you to weed them out and give increased safety.

I am reminded of a farmer mutual insurance company, which at first met with heavy losses. After the assessments became correspondingly heavy, far above the expectation, many members withdrew. The others kept on. After the storm had passed, losses became normal, and for over twenty years they not only paid no assessments on their insurance, but received annual dividends on their accumulated surplus investments. And by the way your insurance department is now operated, you have the best reasons to expect that your assessment cost soon will be normal and insignificant.

The success of your mutual guaranty depends mainly upon having the best and a sufficient number of examiners, pay them a liberal salary, and see to it that all violators of the law are punished to the limit, which I understand is now your policy. So much on the past, now on the future.

Exempt from Taxation

The province of every government is to protect its citizens. Our constitution promises to insure domestic tranquillity and promote the general welfare and happiness of the people.

Let me adduce examples how it exercises some of these duties in support of the arguments to follow. It gives aid, by means of the tariff, to what are termed "infant industries." Is keeping a reserve for emergencies of which

BUILDING OWNED BY THE BANK

MILWAUKEE

NEWS LETTER By Mortimer I. Stevens

WISCONSIN

Perhaps the wave of optimism which appears to have attacked the eastern states since the Standard Oil decision has extended westward as far as Milwaukee, but certain it is that there is a considerably better tone in all financial transactions than has appeared for some time in the past.

A large number of the manufacturers in heavy staples claim that their orders show a healthy increase while the iron and steel industry is represented by factories working full time. The country banker reports every prospect for bumper crops again this year and is in good shape to care for this movement. Rains during the past week have been general throughout the state and the farmers are jubilant.

Bond sales both in Milwaukee and in the state are reported as good for this time of the year, the chief demand being for the better grade of securities.

Banks Now under New Law

State Bank Commissioner A. E. Kuolt has notified the 542 state banks and trust companies of Wisconsin that their fees for examination under the new law passed are due and is ordering them to remit. The examination fees are now based on the total assets of a bank, a year are required. The total amount of examination fees under the new law is $22,000, ranging from $20 upward. Two examinations an increase of $14,000 over those under the old law.

Owen Bank Guaranty Bill Reported

The senate committee on corporations decided during the week to report in the substitute Owen bill for the guaranty of bank deposits without recommendation. The substitute bill is the one on which hearings were had some time ago and provides that every bank shall credit on its books one-half of one per cent of its average deposits each year to the "depositors' insurance fund," until the amount reaches two per cent. It must also credit interest at the rate of three per cent on the amount carried on its books to the credit of the fund the preceding year.

This bill was also accompanied by the companion bill drawn by Senator Owen, relating to the organization of banks in the state and providing for an examination of persons who wish to start a bank by the bank commissioner at a hearing, notice of which shall be sent to the applicants and also to the executive committee of the State Bankers Association.

Wisconsin Increases Bank Inspections

The last two measures recommended by the special committee on banking appointed at the close of the last regular session of the Wisconsin state legislature were concurred in by the senate during the past week. The senate was almost unanimous in its approval.

Most important of these two bills is the one providing for two examinations annually of the state banking institutions by the banking department. This bill also provided for an increase in the examination fees to be paid by the banks and trust companies. The present law makes the capital stock and surplus the basis for the payment of fees; the new bill makes total assets the basis for determining the fee and provides that banks with total assets of less than $100,000 shall pay $20; $100,000 and less than $300,000 shall pay $35; $300,000 and less than $500,000 shall pay $50; $500,000 and less than $1,000,000 shall pay $75 and for every bank having total assets of $1,000,000 or more, $75, plus $25 for each additional million above the first million or fraction thereof.

Four additional bank examiners are provided for in the new bill, beside two additional clerks in the department. The salary of the commissioner of banking is raised from $4,000 to $5,000; the salary of the deputy from $2,000 to $3,000 and each bank examiner starting at $1,800 a year, may have his salary increased at the rate of $200 a year according to efficiency, until the maximum of $2,500 is reached.

The second bill limits the classes of securities which may be taken as collateral for loans of the funds of mutual savings banks. The present law allows one-half the funds of such institution to be loaned on personal securities and bonds. The new law prohibits the loans of these funds upon personal security.

New State Bank Opens at Fond du Lac

The Citizens State Bank of Fond du Lac was formally opened May 22d. The interior of the bank is neat and arranged in a manner to meet the requirements of the bank employees as well as the patrons. The officers are E. A. Curtis, president, and John P. Kalt, cashier. The new bank's fixtures are of solid oak attractively arranged. The bank is provided with a huge Diebold fire proof safe.

¶ This Bank, being at the logical center of Wisconsin banking activity, and having an exceptional list of State and Foreign correspondents, offers its services to conservative Banks with the assurance that such a connection will be of mutual advantage.

Country Banker and Counsellor

Scott Hopkins of Topeka tells the Kansas bankers what must be known and done to be ultimately successful

Trust Officer Scott Hopkins of the Prudential Trust, Topeka, delivered a very valuable paper before the Kansas bankers, at the Kansas City, Kan., convention. He treated the country banker as the general counselor and sage of the community, and among other things said:

After a young man has acquired the best education he can make for himself, or his parents can afford to give him, and has taken a course in law, and has acquired the consciousness that every transaction in business is based upon some legal principle, then my advice to him would be to go into a country bank. There is no business work-shop or laboratory possibly offered where his faculties will be called into quicker use than in such an institution. Every day he comes in close personal touch with the people of the community there and so he takes occasion to speak to his neighbor and his neighbor's neighbor (which, by the way, is the best kind of advertising), about the good business and legal sense of that banker. The man also will begin to feel that he ought to do something in return for the kindness conferred, and the final result is that the man and his neighbor and other neighbors go to the bank, deposit their money and form a business relationship in this way, which is more binding than the ordinary relationship of a mere bank debtor and creditor.

The lawyer banker soon finds that there are a great many men in that community who are in the habit of transacting business in a very loose and unmethodical way. Jones is in the habit of going to his bank and saying: "Mr. Cashier, my neighbor and I have decided to make a trade of our property, we have talked the matter over and we have written up a contract as neighbors; we have drawn up deeds before a justice of the peace, we now propose to leave this contract and this deed here in the custody of the bank and next spring, about March 1st, we expect to close the transaction; you look this matter over and see that the fair thing is done between us."

If such a proposition were put up to our lawyer banker friend he would look over the contract and very likely find that some of the most essential things had been omitted in that crude neighborly contract. An investigation of the deed might disclose errors in possibly vital and material parts of the instrument. If the transaction were permitted to run along in the way suggested by the customers of this bank the chances are that when the day of settlement came around there would be misunderstanding. There might be a question about the tax, about insurance, about description or details of payment, possession, fixtures, rights of tenants, etc. The discussion might become quite heated and before an amicable settlement could be effected the parties might become very angry, a law-suit might ensue, and the banker might lose one or both of these men as desirable customers of his bank. A lawyer banker gave me an excellent pointer about drawing up a deed. He suggested first to make it a rule never to attempt drawing up a deed unless the grantor brought in the original deed conveying the property to the grantor, then in drawing up the new deed under the clause "party of the first part," make the statement clear; "This Indenture Witnesseth; That John Jones, who is named as grantee in a deed recorded in book—page—recorded in the office of the register of deeds, and—his wife, parties of the first part do hereby convey unto—party of the second part, his heirs and assigns forever the following described property to-wit:" This is a good suggestion and one that is offered to all of you in your future work in this direction. You can see the force of the thought in identifying the grantee of the former deed with the grantor now proposing to make the new conveyance, and secondly having the old deed before you you can be sure that the names are written alike in both instruments. Those of use who have had experience in perfecting titles in the matter of farm mortgage loans can testify, for instance, how much time we have put in trying to identify J. P. Jones as Jared Parsons Jones.

The country banker of to-day enjoys as wide a variety of experience as the city banker formerly did. Under the modern methods of doing business corporations are rapidly taking the place of the individual, and in the active centers the banker of to-day is called upon to exercise his business and legal judgment continually, not only in matters involving the interest of one man, but the interests of many men in combination. This necessitates a knowledge of corporate law, of interstate commerce, of state and municipal taxation, and trusts of every character and description. The banker is consulted about bond issues covering local telephone lines, co-operative buildings, and what not. He must be able to inform his customers about common and preferred stocks, cumulative stocks, debentures, insurance, annuities and the laws governing these now common legal subjects, and the lawyer banker, who is the most skilled and most accurate in his analysis, and knowledge of the law on these subjects, or displays the best judgment is the man who is most consulted and whose influence becomes therefore the most potent of any one individual in his community.

In brief, business is becoming more and more intense, more complicated, and there is every

St. Louis, May 25.—Some slight improvement in the demand for credits has been noted here this week, and bankers are beginning to feel more hopeful that rates may harden somewhat before a very great while. Seasonable weather here and over the entire territory tributary to St. Louis has served to stimulate business along general lines, and confidence is growing as surely and strongly as is the winter wheat plant. Prospects for crops of all kinds have improved during the last ten days. Good rains have relieved the dry spots in the Middle West, and indications point to bumper yields, not only of cereals, but small crops as well. The latter feature is one of importance, owing to the enormous distribution made by this center of products, other than cereals. Bankers who attended the Texas and Oklahoma conventions came back with reports of extreme hopefulness in those regions. In Texas wheat harvest has commenced, and the cutting this year is one of the earliest on record. Southwestern bankers say merchants are preparing to lay in bigger supplies for the coming autumn than at any like period since the last panic. Shelves are empty, or near so, and these will be replenished for the fall trade. The plan here is to be in absolute preparedness for the drain which the tremendous crops will mean. Lines are being carefully laid this far ahead, which fact accounts for the desire or preference local financial institutions show for loans of shorter duration. Funds here continue plentiful, and the range of interest rates remains unchanged, but more accommodations are being granted toward the major end of the register. Business so far this year has been of a routine character, with rates low, but financiers in this section seem to believe the year's average will be materially lifted by what they will receive for their money in the fall. There is a decided note of optimism both among bankers and the business community at large.

Oklahoma National Belligerent

Advices from Oklahoma are to the effect the gauntlet has been thrown down hard, and from now on it will be war to the bitter end between the Oklahoma State Banking Board, defending the guaranty system and the nationals of the state. The fight started several weeks ago when Governor Lee Cruce made public his statement charging the nationals of Oklahoma with originating the campaign against the guaranty plan. Immediately the nationals resented the charge and began to prepare for action. As a result, it is declared, the national bankers will form a separate organization, similar to that already formed by the state bankers. "The suits brought by the state board against the thirty-six nationals that recently changed from state to nationals institutions, may result in the collection of the funds claimed by the banking board, but the testimony will lay bare all the affairs of the guaranty fund and its gross mismanagement. This is just what the bankers of the state want to know, and they are almost willing to pay the recent 1 per cent assessment to learn just where the thousands of dollars in former assessments have gone to." The above statement was made by Frank L. Ketch of the Lawton National, one of the thirty-six defendants. He says the banks have employed the very best legal talent in the state and are in shape to fight the case. It is likely one test of the thirty-six will be tried. The state board seeks to collect the assessment due from the state banks at the time they were nationalized. Some of the changing banks have already paid. Mr. Ketch also says that another special assessment will be made by the state banking board on the average daily deposits of the State banks within the next thirty days, and that the suit recently instituted against the thirty-six nationals was intended to intimidate other state banks and keep them from taking out national charters.

For Chairman

But two avowed candidates for chairman of the A. B. A. council, to be elected at the New Orleans convention, have appeared. They are Solomon Wexler of New Orleans and William George of Aurora, Ill. Down east there is a small boom for James G. Cannon (but whether or not Mr. Cannon means it is not known) and out west the J. B. Forgan talk will not down, not even at J. B.'s command.

for the year from insurance premiums was $2,893.05, with a membership of 582. The reports for 1911 show a good balance; revenue from insurance premiums for the year, $9,112.03; total membership, 1,352, this including 1,328 banking institutions—national, state and trust companies, and 24 brokers, the latter being entitled to membership under our by-laws.

History of the Association

When our association was organized in 1891 at Lebanon, the total bank deposits in the state were approximately $120,000,000.00, about $45.00 per capita. To-day the banking capital alone exceeds that amount, with deposits in all banks in Missouri aggregating approximately $620,000,000.00, about $200.00 per capita, a growth not excelled elsewhere in the country, so far as we can determine.

The wonderful progress, both of our country and of our state, during the period covered by the life of the association is indicated by comparative figures on a few items of special interest, which certainly indicate that Missouri has enjoyed its proportionate share of growth and prosperity during the period in which we are so much interested on this occasion. We can refer with pardonable pride to such figures, and also to other Missouri statistics of equal interest. The value of Missouri farming lands with improvements, for instance, has increased in the last ten years from about $844,000,000.00 to approximately $1,710,000,000.00, an increase of 103%, and out of 196,500 farm owners, 108,300 own their farms free of encumbrance.

It is not difficult to understand the tremendous increase in the bank deposits of Missouri when we contemplate the figures indicating the wealth of the state, the figures just noted, and other figures representing the actual wealth produced. The total proceeds from sale of surplus products of Missouri last year, according to published reports, aggregated $342,542,908.00, while the total value for the year of all Missouri products, the products of the forest, the field and the mine, the quarries, the dairies, the barnyards, and all producing agencies was estimated at $550,000,000.00. Why, the Missouri hen alone, and she just scratched the surface, has to her credit a sum of $10,000,000.00 in excess of that which was yielded from under the surface—the barnyard products yielding $44,866,477.00, while the mines and quarries yielded $34,867,640.00. Missouri is capable of furnishing almost every staple and product the world demands. The bureau of labor statistics in its last annual report gave us some interesting facts indicating the boundless resources of the state, and their report is of special interest at this time in view of the recent disaster by which we lost our state capitol building. According to the information compiled, our new state capitol building can be constructed and fully equipped without going outside of the state to any considerable extent for the required material, supplies, etc. Stone from the Carthage district, marble from the Ozarks, lumber from the forests of Southeastern Missouri, iron from the Iron Mountain country, sand—and plenty of it—from the beds of our own great rivers—in short, everything required for constructive purposes right here at home, and with equipment, furnishings, etc., obtainable from the factories and workshops of our great cities, and the cash available for the payment both of material and labor in the sale of bonds to our own banks and investors. Certainly the new capitol, completed in keeping with the dignity and importance of the commonwealth, can be made a great monument to our wonderful resources. The part to be taken by members of the association in this undertaking is only one instance of what they are equipped to accomplish. With almost one hundred and fifty millions of banking capital, the banks of Missouri are well able to handle the business and trade interests of the state.

The high position occupied by the banks of Missouri reflects great credit not only upon the management, but also upon the supervising powers, both state and national, and in this connection it is a pleasure to note the continued good record of the state bank supervising department. With a general banking law not excelled in any other state, and with a most capable and efficient supervision of the banking institutions of the state under that law, we are not surprised to be able to chronicle the fact that in the very few bank failures we have experienced in Missouri, there has not been a single dollar of loss to a depositor for a number of years. This applies to national as well as state banks. The Missouri Bankers Association as an organization has kept in close touch with the state banking department, and acknowledges itself to be under great obligations to the bank commissioner and his assistants for results accomplished. As an association we stand ready to co-operate with the state banking department in their endeavor to maintain upon a high plane the work of supervision. The banks of Missouri realize more that ever before the value of examinations, both to the banks themselves and also the general public, and we should give our continued support to the supervising departments, both state and national. In passing, we want to refer briefly to the clearing house examination system which has been established in St. Louis, Kansas City, and St. Joseph. Most excellent results have been obtained, and the permanency of the system is assured. Bank examinations cannot be too rigid and complete, and every member of this association should welcome the bank examiner, and if the banker keeps his house in order, he will at all times submit most cheerfully to the inspection provided by the law under which he operates.

The excellent standing of the banks of Missouri, and the general confidence manifested towards them by the public is indicated by the fact that during the last legislature there was practically no suggestion even that the general assembly should give any time whatever to the consideration of a guaranty of deposit measure. Referring to the recent session of the legislature leads us to call your attention to the report of our very efficient legislative committee, which report informs you of the enactment of several measures of special interest to our membership. The very necessary amendment providing for sufficient funds to operate the state banking department on a proper basis; false statement measure, the derogatory statement measure, and some other measures of minor importance. Special attention will be given to a discussion of these new laws during this convention.

The report of the taxation committee is of special interest also. That committee have waged an earnest warfare against the unequal system of assessment and have again accomplished excellent results. This association should at all times encourage any movement which has for its purpose the securing of an improved system of assessment for taxation purposes. We earnestly recommend that the taxation committee should in the near future give this matter additional consideration in the hope that some plan will be evolved for the solution of a troublesome question. We are not sure but that we should urge the appointment by the governor of an expert taxation commission, whose duty it should be to consider the subject in detail, and whose ultimate purpose should be to secure a fair and equitable system of assessment on all classes of property by the county and district assessors of the state.

The committee on rewards have an interesting report, and it indicates considerable activity in that branch of the work. Membership in the association carries with it a strong protection against fraud by forgery, etc., not, however, to the extent of reimbursement for losses incurred, but only providing for the punishment of the offender when apprehended. The loss incurred is the cost of the transaction, and must be charged up to experience or carelessness. The members are again urged to use every possible precaution in their banking transactions with strangers. Ordinary discretion in such matters will, as a rule, prevent loss to the bank and trouble and expense to the association.

Kansas City

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

Omaha

Had the joint meeting of the Missouri and Kansas Bankers Association been held a week earlier, there would have been many hundreds of doleful faces in Kansas City, May 24th and 25th. Instead of these evidences of gloom, however, the visiting bankers wore smiles and were genuinely optimistic. It all came about because of the break in the general drouth which had been long and discouraging. The general rains over the Central West brought a renewal of prosperity that can be appreciated only by those familiar with conditions where everything depends upon agricultural production. This sudden and cheering aspect of things was the subject of much discussion among the bankers who attended the Kansas City meetings. "The crops have never been better," said J. M. Wilcoxson, of Carrollton, Mo., who is one of the veteran bankers of the Central West. He was president of the Missouri Bankers Association in 1894. This statement was a concrete expression of the opinions of most of the delegates.

J. A. Lewis

J. A. Lewis, cashier of the National Bank of Commerce of St. Louis, is a firm believer in the business of banking for a young man. While in Kansas City attending the big convention Mr. Lewis gave out an interview which should be interesting to every bank clerk. Among other things he said: "It doesn't require any amount of capital for the right kind of a young man to open a bank in a wide awake town in Kansas or Missouri. There are splendid openings for just that sort of youngster to-day.

"His first requisite must be a reputation for honesty. He also must have had some experience in banking and must be, like Caesar's wife, above reproach. There is plenty of capital in almost any good town in Kansas and Missouri to back such a man. I'll admit that such a young man does not grow upon every bush, but if a young fellow with the right kind of spirit and honesty feels that he would like to open a country bank he need not hesitate because of the lack of capital."

Bankers Optimistic

Bankers in the Central West are feeling particularly fine just now over the fact that good rains have been general in this section within the past ten days. Practically every foot of the ground in Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas and Oklahoma with parts of Texas was soaked. The rains came after a period of drought that brought discouragement and anxiety. Although the crop killers had already given expression to their dolorous prophecies, it is now believed that an average crop of corn, wheat and cotton will be harvested, while the fruit crop has turned out much better than had been expected.

Predicts Prosperity

"I believe there will be good crops and renewed prosperity in this section of the country," said Thornton Cooke, treasurer of the Fidelity Trust Company of Kansas City, who has been traveling over the South and West. "The cotton crop will be above the average provided there are a few light rains from now on until the crop ripens. Prosperity is returning to this part of the country. I believe that the decision of the supreme court in the Standard Oil case, will relieve the tension in the East and give us here in the West opportunity to realize upon our own resources. The long period of liquidation is about over and the money market so far as we are concerned is improving every day. The demand for money is getting stronger and deposits are growing.

Banking Notes

The Omaha Commercial Club spent the week ending May 26th on a trade excursion into the interior of Nebraska. The party consisted of over a hundred of the most prominent business men of Omaha and they traveled in a special train of nine handsomely appointed coaches. Many Omaha bankers took advantage of this opportunity to visit country connections and to solicit new business.

last week aged 77 years. He had been in the banking business in Kansas City for more than 25 years.

C. W. Barkley, for thirty years cashier of the State Bank of Seward, Neb., was found dead in a corn crib last week with a bullet in his brain. It is believed that he committed suicide in a fit of despondency. His accounts are said to be in perfect condition.

Practically every bank in Kansas City and several in St. Joseph and Omaha were represented at the meeting of the Oklahoma Bankers Association in Oklahoma City, May 22d and 23d. Some of the Kansas City bankers found it hard to stay all of the last day of the convention because of the necessity of getting home in time to prepare for their own big meeting on Wednesday and Thursday.

The Wichita delegation to the Kansas City convention was a particularly jolly lot. It was made up of E. E. Bleckley, Fourth National Bank of Wichita; Charles W. Carey, National Bank of Commerce; C. O. Chandler, Kansas National Bank; George W. Robinson, Security State Bank; Wallace C. Kemp, Citizens' State Bank; A. N. Richardson, American State Bank; J. W. Dice, Merchants' State Bank; W. W. Brown, Stock Yards State Bank and Frank T. Ransom, Union Stock Yards National Bank.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Dallas, Texas, Trust and Savings Bank, last week, S. J. Hay was elected president of the bank. It was also decided to increase the capital stock of the bank from $200,000 to $300,000.

Announcement has been made that the State National Bank of Oklahoma City and the Oklahoma City National Bank will consolidate under the former name effective May 29th. The consolidated institution will have a capital of $500,000 and a surplus of $100,000 and deposits aggregating $5,500,000. The officers will be: H. W. Williams, president; John M. Hale, Don Lacy and C. H. Everest, vice-presidents; George L. Cook, cashier; W. M. Bonner, Pat Roden, Henry Elliot and Frank C. Clark, assistant cashiers and Gardler Given, auditor. Edward H. Cook, former president of the State National Bank, will be chairman of the directorate of the new institution.

M. D. Thatcher, president of the First National Bank of Pueblo, Col., spent several days last week in Kansas City visiting old friends. Mr. Thatcher was a banker in Kansas City forty years ago.

Group Four of the Nebraska Bankers Association met at Oxford last week followed by the meeting of Group Five at Broken Bow. Group One will meet May 30th.

ILLINOIS GROUP MEETINGS

The June meetings of the Illinois groups are as follows: June 2d, Group Ten at Murphysboro; June 7th, Group Eight at Carrollton; June 9th, Group Five at Pontiac; June 14th, Group Seven at Shelbyville; June 21st, Group Three at DeKalb; June 22d, Group Two at Peoria; June 27th, Group One at Moline. Members of I. B. A. council will be elected at each meeting under the Cairo amendment.

Col. Alfred H. Sellers, first president of the Chicago Title, Guaranty and Trust Company, died last week at Pasadena, Cal., where he had lived for several years. He was 73 years of age, and had been in the title and abstract business in Chicago from 1866 to the time of his retirement.

COMMERCE BODY HEARS REYNOLDS

George M. Reynolds, on Wednesday, addressed the Chicago Association of Commerce on his pet theme—The National Reserve Association Plan. There was a large, interested attendance.

GROUP ONE WASHINGTON

Group One, Washington, met on Thursday at Spokane, in the assembly hall of the new Old National Bank building. J. Greer Long, president of the Spokane clearing house, presided. Mayor W. J. Hindley and Edward T. Coman, president of the chamber of commerce, welcomed the visitors. W. R. Baker of Collville, responded. There were two fixed addresses. "Joys of Country Banking," W. A. McEachern; "Credits," J. J. Rouse, cashier First National, Pullman, Wash., and "National Reserve Association Plan", R. P. Loomis, cashier First National, Malden, Washington. There was a general discussion to close and a dinner in the evening.

A MOST COURAGEOUS REFORMER

It should not be forgotten under the new order of things in the eastern metropolis that the first intrepid advocate of putting trust companies under supervision and compelling them to keep adequate reserves was Wm. A. Nash, chairman of the clearing house committee. It was early apparent to him as well as to other skillful bankers and financiers that the banking situation in New York could be made much stronger by bringing all of the banking units into a closer working agreement. He went almost alone to do battle at Albany before the legislative committees, protesting against the no-reserve feature of trust company banking. It has been claimed that quite a number of banks at first agreed to join in this remonstrance, but that one by one, with a single exception, they fell away. Mr. Nash was derided, abused, and shunned by those whose interests he was charged with opposing. Nothing daunted, however, he kept on claiming constantly before the Albany committee that trust company banking without a reserve of at least 7½ per cent was not safe. In part he won his point, however, for the law was passed compelling them to keep a 5 per cent reserve. Mr. Nash's friends now bow to the fact that the panic of 1907, which originated and had its greatest stress in New York City, could never have happened, had the trust companies been put under the restrictions then advocated by Mr. Nash. This reformer has not offered any excuses for the position which he took before the legislature, nor in the battle royal which was fought between the clearing house banks and the outsiders later on. He does claim, however, and is able to show, that trust company opposition to the measures which he advocated and which later on were adopted by the clearing house, has been a very expensive performance to the companies.

Now the entire trouble seems to have been settled probably in a more satisfactory way than if former differences had never occurred. Trust company banks will now be members of the New York Clearing House, keeping 25 per cent reserve and under regular inspection. They will also be eligible to membership in the National Monetary Reserve Association as soon as a few sensible amendments are injected in that plan of reorganizing the currency and banking system of the country. New York has done well to adopt the Chicago system of clearing house supervision which has been adopted already in nearly all the western cities. There can be no question whatever that the banking situation in New York City has been cleared and strengthened by recent events, and there should be no attempt whatever to deprive Wm. A. Nash of his full share of credit in the matter.

Hitherto the New York clearing house and its bank report represented only 40 per cent or less of New York's banking power. In panic times this was a serious handicap and in 1907 was an almost fatal blow to public confidence. Had not the non-members united behind J. P. Morgan and joined the clearing house banks, chaos must have resulted. President A. B. Hepburn has been earnestly in the present movement for clearing house rule and supervision.

ANOTHER OPPORTUNITY LOST

The last session of the Illinois legislature probably would have passed a bank act amendment putting a ban on wildcat banking had it been asked. All forms of banking should be under supervision. On Tuesday of this week a Chicago private bank—yes, doing a savings bank business—went into the hands of a receiver. Developments show that under supervision the mess never could have occurred. Even the savings bank books were not permitted to be kept in agreement with the cash and when this sort of privacy is permitted to go on as banking and in guise of a bank something is "rotten in Denmark." No other line of business with or for the public is permitted to run wild. The "bank" which failed also was a real estate office and as a "broker" the proprietor had to have a license but as a "banker" he required nothing but brazen effrontery. This private bank was only two blocks away from "The United States Loan Bank," which while nothing but a pawn shop, befouls the name of "bank." How long will the public stand for it?

THE ILLINOIS CONVENTION

At Springfield in October the Illinois convention expects to present Woodrow Wilson, a national speaker, and to have a farmer-banker congress, representing actual ownership of one million acres of the best improved farm land in the world. This will be an auspicious occasion. Nearly all railroads in the state run to Springfield direct and the hotels are of the best. The Springfield banks are in agreement that the occasion is to be out of the ordinary. The attendance will be large. President E. E. Crabtree is in personal charge of the speaking program and a strong local committee of bankers will arrange the social features. Let every loyal Illinois banker plan to attend and set a new record in state conventions.

RICHMOND CHAPTER

At the May meeting of the Richmond Chapter held on Thursday the eleventh, the following officers were elected to hold office during the season of 1911-12: S. P. Ryland of the First National, president; G. H. Bates of the National Bank of Va., vice-president; Jno. S. Haw of the First National, secretary, and E. A. Leake of the National Bank of Va., treasurer.

The following delegates were chosen for the Rochester convention: D. E. Mountcastle, First National; C. V. Blackburn, Planters National; Warren M. Goddard, National Bank of Va., and Clinton L. Williams, Merchants National. The alternates are: H. G. Proctor, Jno. M. Miller III, G. B. Gregory, Geo. W. Watt, Jas. P. Watson, and Edward L. Word.

The May meeting marked the close of the season for the Richmond Chapter, and as we look back over the year, we are glad to be able to say that much has been accomplished.

Next season we hope to have new quarters established further uptown, in a more convenient location—a move which has been contemplated by the board of governors for some time, and which we are confident will increase the attendance upon our meetings, as well as to cause the chapter rooms to be used more by the members.

GROUP ONE, ILLINOIS

Officials of Group One, Illinois, "accepted" Moline's invitation to hold the June 27th meeting in that city. Moline didn't know of it—not in advance, at least—but is glad it happened. Nelson H. Greene was in Chicago on Wednesday and the plans for the day include a morning session and at 1 o'clock a boat ride up the river with a Dutch lunch. Chicago visitors will be returned to Moline in time to get the evening trains back to the city. W. E. Taylor, soil expert for Deere & Company, will be the orator of the day.

AMERICAN BANKERS ASSURANCE COMPANY TO REMOVE FROM MISSOURI

The controlling interest in the Federal Union Surety Company of Indianapolis, purchased last week for St. Louis parties, was really for the American Bankers Assurance Company of St. Louis. Plans for a merger of the two companies are under way, but until they are completed the American Bankers will hold the relation of a holding company for the Federal Union Surety. The headquarters of the American Bankers will be removed to Indianapolis. The American Bankers was organized primarily to guarantee deposits in banks, and, while it has been licensed in fifteen states it is not licensed in Missouri because of legal complications. J. B. Christiansen, the new president of the Federal Union is vice-president and counsel for the American Bankers. It is probable that the companies will be merged as the American Bankers, it continuing its deposit guaranty business and entering also the surety and fidelity lines.

Banking

The Wednesday evening lecturer before the Chicago Chapter, A. I. B. this week, was Lucius Teter, president of the Chicago Savings Bank & Trust Company. The subject was "Banking."

True to its Name—

The founders of the Northwestern National Bank exercised foresight in selecting its title.

The growth of this bank has been continuous and sturdy, and today the scope of its activity is "northwestern" in the full sense of the term.

With correspondents throughout all the territory from Chicago to the Pacific, and in Canada, exceptional facilities are offered for handling the business of the Great Northwest.

Advertising for Savings

Secretary F. A. H. Garlich of St. Joseph, president of the Missouri State League of B. & L. Associations, at Kansas City convention

In this age of progress and invention, where what is new to-day is old to-morrow, it becomes a necessary question what of the old to discard, what of the new to take up. The realm of advertising has grown to such an extent and is so diversified that what is fit and competent for one line of business may be unfit and unsuitable for another. The question that we are interested in, is how best to advertise the bank and savings institution, to produce the best results for a given amount of outlay.

The wholesale house, the factory, the mill, the producer each have salesmen at large outlay for salary and expenses to place their goods before their customers; the savings institution while it needs the support and confidence of the people just as much as the former, usually has no salesmen, no traveling men, but must content itself with campaigns and plans of advertising to obtain its extension of business. Assuming that an amount is set aside for the promotion of the business, for the work of this silent salesman, as it were, how can this messenger seeking the confidence of the people best make himself known, felt and followed through the use of printer's ink and its adjuncts.

There being no paid advertising manager for this institution, the work naturally will fall to the cashier or his assistant, so we will start him to work to increase the assets a hundred thousand dollars and put three hundred new accounts on the books. At first glance he says it cannot be done, but as he gingers up to the possibilities of a carefully worked out plan, he begins to take courage by accomplishment, until in a short time he knows he can do it, for he is doing it. The new accounts are coming in every day. This confidence is all important and often means the success or failure of the plan. The encouragement of the first few leads to increased effort, finally bringing the full measure of success.

The plans for this campaign are so varied and so different in nature that one must be studied out to suit the requirements of the city in which one lives. What has proven successful elsewhere may be tried by you if properly pushed and backed up. Many an otherwise good plan has been lost by not being followed up properly. However, there must be a "plan." A carefully thought out newspaper campaign is sure of results if good live material is used and properly changed. Commence the campaign with four-inch double column containing the one word Save, next day put a large question mark after it. The next put the sentence, Save what? The next unfold your story to be followed by your statement, items of growth, etc.

Local interest in the savings department may be stimulated by offering a cash prize for best essays on savings to be written by children of a certain age. This has been found to interest the whole family and, if followed up with a careful solicitor or good newspaper work, will bring good results. A card in the paper is all right for the bank statement, but if extended newspaper advertising is to be done it must be done on a specific plan or results will be negative. First survey your territory, ask the question—have the city people the money you want, or is it in the hands of the country people? Which is the more promising field? If necessary, get a complete list of both, these are your prospects and you must influence them or your expected results will not be forthcoming. Adopt any one of a dozen good ideas to place your possibilities before these people and by following up the plan persistently your results are certain.

People like pictures. Have a good half tone cut made of your building, of your board of directors, of your bank interior and embellish your advertising with these simple object lessons that tend to make your location well known and your personnel familiar to your prospective customers. Having secured a list of from 300 to 2,500 prospective customers that you want to reach, plan a campaign of three pieces of mail sent several days apart. The first is an "interest awakener." The second is the "plan unfolded." The third is the "clincher." Your first merely outlines the fact that you are going to place a matter before them that should command their attention. This arouses their interest. The second discloses the plan, it may be safes, home banks, in the "tone" and character of railroad service is just as great as it is in hotels, for instance. The superiority of either service is largely determined by attention to details. The observance of this rule is the secret of Burlington high-efficiency service.

The Difference

Be a Burlington guest next time you go to St. Paul or Minneapolis! The advantages of the service are highly important—its completeness will surprise you.

coin envelopes, souvenirs, any one of twenty devices with which you are all familiar, or it may be merely an invitation to call at the bank as you want to show them the big door on the cash safe, and how it works; your third gives a strong presentation of your resources, officers, directors and equipment and contains facsimile letters of pleased customers that seem so simple and yet are so potent a means of influencing new business.

When the prospect calls show him your safety appliances, show him the securities and how they are kept safe, show him the adding machine, the burglary insurance policy and take an interest in him; you may think he knows all about these things, but assume that he does not. Your interest in him will be rewarded by his confidence and very likely by his business. Having tried one plan with meager results, do not blame advertising, blame your plan; with the experience you have gained study out a better one. The one tried was not the right one. The effect of advertising is accumulative and every time you try to arouse interest you make the next attempt easier. The fact that you do advertise gives one the impression that you are wide awake and progressive, and when business is to be influenced by a fellow townsman he will say, "take your account to the so and so bank—they are wide awake." Why does he believe this? He knows you advertise, he knows you push for business. The little booklet he received in the mail gave him his first impression.

You cannot make a little four-page folder in one color and no pictures do the work of a neatly gotten up illustrated twelve-page pamphlet containing in concise and easily understood language your "whole story." Many so-called advertisements are stingy little waste basket fillers. Analyze the advertisements in your daily paper, your magazine, your morning mail. Which one catches your eye and holds your attention? Learn of them, put every deserving ad away carefully to help you plan your next campaign of business promotion. The man who seldom reads an ad makes a poor advertiser.

Having used a follow-up plan this spring, follow it up in the fall with another one and commence right where you left off by telling them, "This is our first letter to you since last spring. Now that the crops are in we feel you are in good shape to open an account with us"—make it personal and get a little feeling into the letter, and let them know you expect an answer or a personal call. Secure some device or trade mark to use on your stationery and advertising. Get something neat and attractive, then use it on all your printed matter. It tends to individualize your advertisements so that soon every one who sees this trade mark at once will associate it with your business. In sending a set of letters use different envelopes and different paper for each set. Avoid sameness, get something new. Blotters are kept for weeks in the house while a circular is often thrown away. Use well printed enameled blotters. If you expect an answer enclose a printed return envelope.

If you know of, or can get some man or woman who has made a success of house to house work, give your home savings bank, coin envelope or savings stamps into their charge for a carefully planned house to house canvass. This must be preceded by a good introductory letter telling of the plan and the agent's name. Also run an ad in your local newspaper stating the progress made and, if possible, get one or two families to allow their names to be used as having liked, or taken up the plan. In other words, make the canvass personal and get some enthusiasm aroused. Get every one to talking about it. Invite farmers to bring in their papers for safekeeping, arrange a receptacle and large envelopes with their names on, alphabetically arranged, or sell them a small tin box with their own key. Get them in the habit of coming to the bank.

Many banks and buildings and loan men control other buildings with perhaps a vacant vacant store window. Have a good canvas sign made on a frame 4x6 feet, containing your trade mark, name, location, and a catch phrase in two colors. Have your janitor keep the vacant store window clean and your sign behind it. The result is a good ad at little expense and out of wind and weather, ready to be changed to another building when this one is rented. This is better than billboard work, is more permanent and less expensive.

While looking around for a good advertisement do not forget that you yourself are the big advertisement for your institution. Your quiet conservative habits, your lack of speculation, your absence from the fast set, your close and careful attention to the details of your business are the main stays of that confidence you are building up, without which all the literature you may send is worse than wasted.

with the improvement that any banker will be under the same control. The people would at once regard their deposits in banks as safe as they do now the bank currency, and bank runs would not be known, except from history. We cannot legislate to prevent business depressions or hard times; we cannot legislate to prevent bank failures, but we can prevent the loss to depositors after the bank has failed, and thereby prevent the disasters which follow in its track."

Judge Charles E. Lobdell Speaks

Judge Lobdell read a fine paper on "Am I My Brother's Keeper," in the course of which he said:

"He must be wise indeed who to such a gathering can offer a new or useful thought on banking, and an obscure country banker would have a nerve equal to Gillett the cattle dealer of blessed memory to undertake it. Taking I hope a more nearly correct measurement of myself I shall abjure the great problems of finance and banking of which I am but an humble student, and address myself briefly (I trust) to the human side of the banking business and content myself with calling attention to some obvious facts well known to us all, but which we too easily forget or too readily ignore.

"As to the advisability of a long line of liquid assets we should readily agree, to the enormity of excessive overdrafts we should all assent, as to the pernicious practice of the clearing house in restraint of trade and violation of the sacred rights of the country banks, to have all their items cleared at par and receive 3 per cent on their inactive balances, there would be little division of sentiment in the rural districts. Were I, however, to propound to each of you gentlemen the inquiry which appears in connection with my name upon your program, I should in most cases be answered with a stare or in the language of the street with, "What are you giving me?" Were I to transpose the phrase to read, "Thou art thy brother's keeper," each of you Missourians would probably respond "show me," and yet I have persuaded myself that the inquiry is a pertinent one not out of harmony with the spirit and purpose of this gathering."

Referring to bankers who say there is no sentiment in the banking business the judge said:

"Yet there isn't a one of those old tight wads so mean that he wouldn't like to have somebody call him kind, none so selfish that he wouldn't like to be thought generous, none so dead to the motives which move men to patriotic action that he wouldn't like to be deemed a patriot: but follow them to their respective homes and you will find them no more of influence than the street corner bum, and you will find that the man with sentiment, the sentiment of human kindness, and sense, is getting the best class of business, making better earnings and suffering no more frequent losses. And I wander still further from my theme to say that I am not in sympathy with the idea that there is no sentiment in the banking business.

"Let's see. You are at home; there comes in a fine manly lad, a high school boy, in overalls, jumper, cowhide boots and battered old straw hat. He's been to the Kansas harvest field, his face, kissed to a splendid brown by Kansas wind and sun, is aglow with health and manly pride as he produces the check which represents the net proceeds of his vacation's toil and opens his first bank account. It may be twenty or forty or sixty dollars. It doesn't mean anything to the bank, but it is for him a transaction he will never forget. It may mean the first step toward a college education. It is the beginning of a financial career, the launching of a human craft on the financial sea, and a well chosen word from you may steer the craft aright, while an attitude which sees in the transaction only its immediate money value to the bank may discourage and drive it upon the rock. Do not tell me there is no place for sentiment in the banking business! He passes on and there comes another, a black robed shrinking figure leading a little child. Haltingly she brings forth the life insurance company's draft, the last mute testimonial of the thoughtfulness and devotion of the departed husband and father. In broken accents she falters, "John always thought so much of you, and told me if I ever needed a friend to come to you. This is all we have: wont you please take it and invest it where it will be safe and earn as much as possible for baby and me?" The man who, in accepting such a trust, would do so with one greedy thought, or reckon the profits to himself or his institution, belongs in the penitentiary instead of the executive office of a bank. Profit or compensation there should be of course, and that is always taken for granted, but the trust and confidence are the things that are worth while. For there is sentiment in the banking business. Waiting for her to go, leaning heavily on his cane, is an aged man, one of the bank's old customers. He asks for the little tin box. You bring it, he opens it and brings out a paper marked "Will," and says, "I realize that I haven't long to last; I have made you my executor without bond; keep what I have invested for mother while she lives, and when we both are gone distribute as I have directed here"; and he puts back the paper and hobbles away, happy in the confident belief that he has left "mother's" affairs in safe hands. Show a finer sentiment if you can,

A Study in Liquidation

E. R. Gurney, the Nebraska orator provides the "light-opera" features at Kansas City to the great delight of his hearers

Kansas City, May 25.—Much was expected of E. R. Gurney who has a genius of combining heavy-weight finance with light opera features in a way that brings thought in the wake of laughter. He looks and talks seriously but his audience penetrates his mein and laughs when apparently he isn't expecting it. On "Liquidation" Mr. Gurney said in part:

You will find my text, perhaps, in the twenty-third chapter and thirteenth verse of the Book of Hard Knocks, reading "and they were called upon to pay up." This little bit of realism, so terse and touching, may be compressed into a single word "liquidation" and therefore shall be my theme for a short while this morning.

Treated grammatically, we may say that "liquidation" is always proper and only tolerably common. As a verb "to liquidate" should be in the active voice, but at times it is mighty passive. And it belongs in the present tense, now being the accepted time, but it delights itself in the future, ninety days being an ever present refuge in time of trouble. I would say that the best thing about a promissory note is not the promise to pay, nor the interest rate, but the knowledge that its redeemer liveth.

I do not know the origin of the promissory note, and I do not think anyone else knows,—so you are not materially the loser by having me for your speaker at this moment, but I suspect that the promise of payment within it comprehended the act of "coming across" with the funds rather than the intimation of the date of a renewal.

It is said that deposit banking found its origin in Florence and through the evolution of chance. Certain Italian merchants of wealth and that respectability which has always distinguished their successors were importuned to care for the gold and silver plate, the ducats and florins of such possessors as desired to travel abroad and had a measure of doubt as to the reliability of the hired man.

In those days, a moderate trip meant months, a journey to the Orient might take years. Thus, in the knowledge that the owner would not be back until December, our merchant and embryo banker with that hatred of waste that has always characterized his successors, let out certain moneys at interest to be repaid in December, and to make sure the promise would be kept with promptitude, he put it in writing, under the sign and seal of the maker. Sometimes, I try to imagine the condition of the atmosphere in Florence if our banker should receive a letter from Guglielmo Vincentio dated November 26th reading: "Honored Sir: My note of 600 florins will be due on the 23d inst. and I beg to hand you my note in payment of the interest; or if L. de Vinci would ask to have his note carried over for three or four months 'until the hog market picks up a bit,' or Signor A. Vespucci, when nicely and kindly asked to pay up would say 'What t'ells the matter with you, aint my note good?'"

Deposit banking has changed a whole lot since the days of Florence, and overland limiteds bring back to us, even while we sleep, the depositor who is like even unto the man from your own state, who wants to be shown; while a demand liability for deposits may become a mighty active liability when it moveth itself aright. And the great American borrower, instead of paying a good percentage for the loans, and being a little bit grateful, and being promptly on hand at the liquidation teller's window at maturity to "put it back" now haggles over the insignificant discount rate and thinks he should pay up when the spirit moves. Verily, a change has come over our horizon and the old landmarks assume a new aspect.

In the great West, and all America is in reality the great West, we are surrounded by the many phases of development and construction incident to a nation of builders. Construction, not to mention development and speculation, ought to operate on funded capital, but they continuously encroach upon the field of commercial credit. For instance A, B, C, and Company are the owners of a very successful department store which, as a commercial proposition or from a banking standpoint is irreproachable. But A is engaged in building a magnificent home with all appurtenances, B is developing a manufacturing industry in the factory district and finds it is taking a barrel of money, and C. has, as a little side speculation having taken over a township of Canada land. And the money going into these several spots is either borrowed from a long suffering bank which hardly feels like offending the members of the firm, or it is taken out of the business and thus subjecting the firm to the necessity of borrowing that much more money. This illustration I give is acted out in many variations with banks all over this country. Again, we have the condition peculiar to America, of the road to wealth and the gateway of opportunity, wherein travels many a poor man up to the heights of possession. But he needs the continuous assistance of funds to match his boundless energies and we find this process repeated over and over. These American people, splendidly honest, and of good faith and great ability, everlastingly need money and yet more money to go with their capacity for business and would rather issue notes than to restrain activity, and would prefer to renew than to pay up.

These men renew promptly, but I sometimes think our supervisory authorities and our boards of directors lay too much stress upon the elements "not due" and "past due" in judging our paper. Not that I would overlook maturities,—far from it,—but I believe that a bright and shining face in a promissory note is never so important as that rugged strength to convert itself into the long green. I have seen notes (owned them, to be honest) artistically executed on beautifully engraved stationery, and so dead that the trump of Gabriel will not rouse them to activity, and they pale in comparison with past due paper secured on fat cattle in the feed yard.

At this point, I confess to you that I have never been a successful banker—rather should I say that I have never managed a bank to my own satisfaction, and along this very line has been my largest measure of discontent. Years ago, our professor used, on the first morning of the school year, to read to the assembled incorrigibles about two feet of rules, the which he subsequently attempted to enforce with a two foot rule or an oak tanned strap. I could, to-day, provide you with a set of rules by which to run a model bank, and I guess that the whips and scorns of time will not fail any of us as a corrective reminder, but notwithstanding all this, I appear before you to-day, if in an educational capacity, rather as an awful example, than as a model for your lines.

On the morning of the panic of 1907, one of my directors, a simple minded, kindly, matter of fact old man came to me and said, "Well, Eddie, you are not worried, are you?" "Oh, no," I said, "Oh no!" (I do hope that liars are not disqualified at the door of Heaven!) "Anyway" he said, "it will be an easy matter, all you have to do is to stop loaning money and collect all your loans as they become due, and we will keep on Easy Street." I smiled, in derision, yet the old man's words were a reproach to me, then, and now. Collect all our loans as they become due? In such a time as that? I could no more do it than I could fly. I did collect some and those collections came in most opportunely.

That panic taught me this lesson,—that the measure of liquidation of our notes in normal times is very much lessened in the time of stringency. We go on, day by day, collecting in considerable amounts, scarcely realizing how large a percentage of the repayments come from loans from other banks, directly or indirectly. When panic comes on, we are astounded, even heartsick to find how many loans we had expected to be paid are held up through contingencies never before dreamed of. We hear the pleadings of excuses and of exasperating delays where we expected legal tender. Liquidation, even in normal times, is not any too thorough. Every tendency seems to work the other way. Economics and safety do not, apparently, lie along parallel lines. The man who borrows for ninety days, confident of renewal, can afford to pay a better rate,—the lending bank with continuous earning power on a note can make profits on a less rate. Then too, we have so many "lines," and there is a constantly increasing number of people who think they have a fee simple and indefeasible right to borrow when they will, that it might surprise some of us to figure up the credit side of bills receivable at the close of any month and find out just what proportion of our notes has been paid, and what part renewed. In my own bank, in the month of April just passed, we collected in cash 35 per cent, and renewed 65 per cent of all maturing paper. I do not know about the experience of other banks, though I imagine there are many, particularly in strictly agricultural districts, where the percentage of liquidation is less. Sometimes a banker tells me he has lost only $17 in the past 27 years, which is cheering news to one who has been stung so often he has gotten used to it, but I never hear such remarks without harboring the profane thought that maybe he is a good renewer and a poor closer. If, now, we consider net liquidation of loans, since there is a very real obligation upon us to meet the daily demands of new borrowers whose claims in many cases seem almost as imperative as those of depositors, we shall find that our percentage of net reduction is very low, and usually, the lowest when most needed.

I know that the stock method with many bankers is to carry a considerable portion of outside paper. I do not wish to appear disrespectful, but "I ha'e my doots." I might, for instance, have a bank on a good corner in Kansas City, or in some of your rich county seat towns,—I might, by reason of such location accumulate very handsome deposit lines,—I might say I would never loan a dollar locally, buying all outside paper. In this, I would get along nicely, perhaps, but even doubting the propriety of such action, believing as I do, that every bank owes a measure of duty to its community to perform its function of loaning, still it would seem to me that in a large sense, as a large banker, or an honest student ought to see

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, May 23.—Invitations to visit the intermountain and Pacific slope country during the summer and early fall months have been extended by the Spokane Chamber of Commerce to 37 boards of trade and commercial bodies in New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Connecticut, Maine, Delaware and Rhode Island. This is the beginning of a "Know-Your-Own-Country-First" movement, the purpose being to give eastern bankers and business men an opportunity to become more intimately acquainted with the resources and financial, commercial, and industrial possibilities of the Northwestern and Pacific states and to cement the bond of friendship between the eastern and western people.

Arrangements for the reception and entertainment of the visitors at various points between St. Paul and Minneapolis and the Pacific Coast will be made by the Spokane organization through a special committee of 100 representative citizens, headed by Edwin T. Conan, president of the Exchange National and presiding officer of the chamber of commerce.

Col. Wakefield on Standard Oil Decision

Colonel W. J. C. Wakefield, president of the Spokane Bar Association, said in an interview that the decision of the supreme court of the United States in the Standard Oil Company case, will help business in general in that it is not inimical to capital. James Taylor Burcham, also of Spokane, who was formerly professor of law at the University of Chicago and Stanford University, says the finding interferes with no legitimate business enterprise that keeps itself free from monopolizing or attempting to monopolize any part of trade or commerce. Other attorneys say the ruling will meet with the approval of all who are not violating the anti-trust act.

Moscow State Bank Bought Out

Moscow State Bank of Moscow, Idaho, capitalized at $25,000, with surplus and undivided profits of $7,500 and deposits of $135,000, has been taken over by the Day & Hansen Investment Company of Spokane, and its associates, Lyman Whittier of Whiting, Iowa; Harry Whiting of Castana, Iowa, and Robert Whittier of Spokane. Harry Whittier becomes cashier, succeeding B. W. Ludeman, retired, the manager being Robert Whittier. The company owns the controlling stock in the Waterville Savings Bank, the Douglas State Bank and the National Bank of Oakesdale, in Washington, the Nevada Valley Bank of Helmsville, Mont., and the Castana Savings Bank of Castana, Iowa.

Big Gains

R. Lewis Rutter, president of the Western Union Life Insurance Company and manager of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company, announces the former has more than $10,000,000 insurance in force. The gain since the beginning of the year has been more than $500,000.

The company started in 1906 with $402,500. In the next year it jumped to $3,716,000 and in 1908 the insurance in force reached $7,410,225. In 1908 it gained more than $500,000, and in 1909 the insurance in force increased from $7,995,270 to $9,501,625. The premiums are invested in first mortgages on improved property in and near Spokane.

Bank Closed

Directors of the State Bank of Commerce at Wallace, Idaho, the second largest bank in the Coeur d'Alene mining district, which was closed on May 12th, declare in a formal statement that the sound assets and the liabilities of the stockholders will result in paying depositors in full at no far distant date.

The bank, which was capitalized at $100,000, had deposits of between $500,000 and $600,000 when it was closed, as against between $800,000 and $1,000,000 a year ago. It is announced that the bank had overloaned to B. F. O'Neil, president and holder of 435 shares of the stock, and the Lane Lumber Company, which has no liquid assets, and also has funds tied up in the failure of the Carnegie Trust Company. The assets of the lumber company, however, are said to be sufficient to cover all indebtedness.

"Until the state commissioner makes a detailed report of the assets of the bank and their convertibility," says the directors' statement, "it will be impossible to say how soon business will be resumed."

The bank was organized on April 10, 1903, the outgrowth of the O'Neil private bank. The original incorporators were: B. F. O'Neil, August Rawlson, Maurice H. Hare and G. Scott Anderson of Wallace, Thomas L. Greenough of Missoula, Mont., and Ewen McIntosh of Kellogg, Idaho.

In Excellent Condition

First State Bank of Kellogg, Idaho, of which B. F. O'Neil, head of the State Bank of Commerce at Wallace, Idaho, was president, is reported to be in excellent condition. Mr. O'Neil resigned when the Wallace bank was closed by the state bank examiner, and W. W. Papesch was elected to the presidency. J. A. Walden, cashier, announces the bank has $88,000 in loans, $70,000 in available cash assets and deposits of $115,000.

Albert Held

Albert Held of Spokane has been appointed by Governor Hay to officially represent the state of Washington on the Boston chamber of commerce excursion to Europe, June 12th to August 16th. The Spokane chamber of commerce will be represented by John H. Shaw, who was its honorary commercial commissioner to China in 1910. The party is limited to 100 American business men.

Banking Notes

Farmers' Security Bank of Milton, Wash., is now open for business. The bank is capitalized at $25,000 and the officers report a good business for the first day. The officers are: president, J. H. Coffman; vice-president, F. M. Kent; cashier, W. W. Wasser.

State Bank of Blackfoot, Idaho, capitalized at $25,000, is in the hands of the state bank examiner. No statement of its condition was made, but it is believed that withdrawals by depositors forced the suspension. H. A. Morgan is president and C. R. Jones is cashier.

Banks at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, report cash deposits of more than $700,000. William Dollar, president of the Exchange National, says business is upon a better foundation than ever and the outlook is bright.

Elza Hurst, for two years property expert in the mortgage department of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company, has gone to Los Molinos, Cal., as sales manager of the 10,000-acre Los Molinos ranch, recently bought by W. H. Kiernan and Jay Lawyer of Spokane, and Frank A. Vanderlip of New York.

Aaron Kuhn, chairman of the board of directors of the Traders National Bank of Spokane, declared on returning home from a trip of two months in the middle west, that he had no intention of becoming interested in a Portland bank.

the problem, I would be but begging the question and shifting onto some of the other of our 25,000 banks the problem of liquidation which some one must solve. Again too, I half suspect that the floating of paper beyond its immediate locality does much to increase the difficulty, broadly considered. Mr. A is a very well to do man, known over three or four counties. He can borrow from any one of a dozen banks, and this very fact exercises its subtle influence to induce him to get into the habit of borrowing from Peter to pay Paul, and to depend more fully upon his ability to shift his line than to liquidate it. With every insolvency, particularly of large concerns whose paper was sold on a wide market, this very phase of the case is perpetually showing up. Many millions of Booth notes were promptly paid at maturity, but not with oyster money. So I say I question if this outside paper panacea, excellent as its features are, is in any true sense, an answer to the problem before us.

If I, a mere country banker may offer suggestions to you men of Missouri, they would be along two lines. The first one would be that we can accomplish something in an educational way. Suppose we make it a point to say to Jno. Smith when he borrows, "Now John, we want to remind you that we will want this note paid substantially at maturity. We would not, in fact, object to renewing it once in case of need, but the simple fact is we are compelled to collect our notes and this entirely without reference to your credit or solvency, we are loaning money every hour of every day, as we ought to and there is no way we can put money out continuously without getting it in on maturing loans at the same time. This argument seems to set well and something at least will be accomplished. Certainly, the result is better than when we, having a weather eye on our competitor who may be prospering say "All right John, you can have all the money you want and keep it till the cows come home, the longer the better, and come back again if you need some more!"

But after all, education, while good and persuasive is something of an iridescent dream and not to be compared with the mighty influence of intelligent self-interest and tried principles of banking. And this leads to my second observation, namely, that the underlying secret of all liquidation in your bills is to have notes which, from their inherent nature, will bring their own liquidation regardless of the notions of the maker, or the pressure of the holder.

Here again am I reminded of my own weak limitations, I have sworn a mighty oath that I will not loan money to any living man to speculate in real estate with. Well, a month or two ago, a young lady came to borrow $5,000 with which to purchase Seattle real estate. The case was slightly complicated by the fact that the young woman is rich in her own right, and richer prospectively and a very desirable client to keep in line. But my oath! Then I remembered it was that I would not loan to any living man and then I let her have it. I got thru by a scratch.

Nevertheless, I reiterate the belief that a note should have such circumstances connected with it as to indicate liquidation. We all want good notes in our bill pouches, and solvent notes are of very great and first importance, but it is not enough to ask "Is John Smith good for $1,000, —but "Can he pay $1,000?" I can not and would not, prescribe any hard and fast rules for judgment. The knowledge that a note will be paid at maturity, by reason of the circumstances connected with it, is of more importance than signers and chattel mortgages. I am only an operator in a little field and can hardly prescribe in concrete measure the paper you should buy, but I believe I am correct in the assertion that the fundamental, underlying principle inheres in all good bank paper, whether in Fremont, Kansas City, Tarkio or London, is whether it will be paid or not. With us, we like notes taken at farm auction sales. We like to buy the trade paper, little notes from and

A SMALL PRIVATE BANK MUDDLE

Frederick Robin (not the New York Robin), of the private bank of P. F. McCarthy & Co., 39th and State, is "away on a vacation" and a rumored shortage is being denied. The audit in progress, however, showed "some irregularity" which was derided as not serious by Mr. McCarthy, who is a real estate man and private banker in one. He promises a statement "later."

J. H. Reynolds, claimed to be a forger who is wanted in many states, was arrested in Oklahoma on a warrant sworn out by the county auditor of Black Hawk county and returned to Waterloo for trial.

Des Moines, May 25.—It looks as if E. J. Curtin of Decorah will be elected president of the Iowa Bankers Association without opposition at the coming state convention at Mason City. Group Three added its endorsement to his candidacy at Charles City last week. Mr. Curtin is popular with the bankers of the state and apparently there will be no contest for the executive office. The race for treasurer seems to be between W. G. C. Bagley of Mason City and Wm. Heuers of Davenport. Mr. Bagley will have the advantage of having the convention in his home town. There seems to be a general opinion among bankers that the vice-president should come from the southern section of the state. Should Mr. Curtin and Mr. Bagley win out with Secretary Hall, a former resident of Sheldon, southern Iowa would not be represented on the official list. D. L. Hinsheimer of Glenwood and J. L. Edwards of Burlington have been mentioned by Des Moines bankers as suitable timber for the office.

As the coming convention will be the silver anniversary of the founding of the Iowa Bankers Association, more than ordinary interest is attached to the gathering. Some little disappointment has been occasioned because Secretary Franklin MacVeagh will not be able to accept the invitation to appear on the program. The preliminary announcement of the convention will be mailed out by Secretary Hall this coming week.

Cedar Rapids is an active candidate for the convention next year. Although the Des Moines clearing house has voted to issue a formal invitation for the convention to come to Des Moines, there is some talk of making no opposition to Cedar Rapids. Southern Iowa bankers are urging a more southerly point next year on account of the extreme northern Iowa location of Mason City. It is possible that the convention will come to Des Moines next year and go to Cedar Rapids the following year without opposition.

Birthday Club

The "Birthday Club," which was an interesting side feature at the meeting of the Iowa bankers in Des Moines last year, will be re-organized again this year at Mason City. G. E. MacKinnon, president of the Mechanics Savings of Des Moines, who organized the club last year, has secured a consignment of big red buttons bearing the words "Birthday Club." These are being passed around and there will be plenty of them at Mason City. The buttons are worn beneath the lapel of the coat, face inwards. The Birthday Club exists for social purposes only. Last year it attained tremendous popularity even though it was its first year with the association. C. H. McNider of Mason City will be associated with Mr. MacKinnon this year in enlisting members.

Meeting of Group Three

The meeting of Group Three at Charles City last week proved unusually successful. State Senator J. T. Webber of Ottumwa was the leading speaker at the afternoon session. He discussed bank legislation and gave the bankers some good advice. John McHugh, president of the I. B. A., gave a splendid talk on "Organization." Prof. Armstrong of the Mason City schools spoke most interestingly of teaching agriculture in the public schools. W. G. C. Bagley was toastmaster at the banquet in the evening.

Toasts were responded to by C. H. McNider, C. D. Ellis, George E. May and Karl Johnson. Morton Wilbur of Charles City was elected chairman of the group. T. S. Hansen of Northwood was chosen secretary.

Groups One and Two Hold Meetings

Two group meetings were held this week. Group One met at Sioux City Tuesday and Group Two met at Webster City, Thursday. The program at the latter was held at the armory. The program included an address of welcome by Mayor H. M. Sparboe, with response by R. W. Birdsall, cashier of the State Bank of Dows. Arthur Reynolds, president of the Des Moines National, was on the program for his paper on "The Aldrich Plan." Attorney W. J. Covil answered questions on the legal aspects of banking. An auto ride wound up the afternoon. The banquet was held in the armory at 6:30. Supt. D. M. Kelly of the Webster City schools was toastmaster. M. F. Healy of Ft. Dodge was on the program to lead off the toasts.

N. J. Lee's Decision on Assessments

Nelson J. Lee, special counsel in the office of Attorney-General Cosson, has held that City Assessor James Parker of Des Moines is right in refusing to deduct government bonds from the assessments of the banks of Des Moines under the new Iowa statute. Mr. Lee holds that the state may tax government bonds for state purposes under the new moneys and credits tax law. This decision seems to put the question of constitutionality squarely up to the bankers. In the meantime, bankers continue to point out that the law is discriminatory in that it places banks and real estate on a different basis.

Miscellany

State Auditor J. L. Bleakly will have no opposition as state auditor for another term according to present indications. Emory H. English, who has been state printer, has been persistently mentioned as a candidate. However, Mr. English has issued a statement in which he says that he will not be a candidate and that he considers Mr. Bleakly entitled to another term. This probably means that the state banking department will be maintained as it is for practically three years more.

The Iowa State Savings at Burlington announces a new seven-story building to cost $250,000. It will be erected adjoining the new Burlington hotel and its officers claim it will be the finest bank building in the state.

The Farmers Savings at Berkley has filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state. The capital is $10,000. John Phelan is president; E. D. Carter, vice-president; F. P. McDaniel, cashier.

The contract for the new Whitney bank building at Atlantic has been let to a Webster City contractor. The building will be two-story brick, 50 by 140.

The Commercial Savings at Britt has filed articles of incorporation. The capital stock will be $35,000. The incorporators include E. P. Healey, T. B. and C. W. Erwin, A. M. Deyoe and R. P. Johnson, the latter of Northwood.

it deposited with the national bank in the panic of 1907, nearly $250,000,000, all without interest? It now, in a small measure, is aiding the merchant marine, which aid soon will be increased. But recently it has taken the burden upon itself of guaranteeing the safety of the deposits of a certain class by the postal banks. All this to protect and promote the general welfare of the people.

States are exempting from taxation mutual savings banks, building and loan associations, and other benevolent institutions, and there are instances where cities exempt factories from taxation, all because it benefits the general public.

No one will deny that bank failures cause untold disaster, ruin and suffering, and that any measure that will prevent their occurrence is a public blessing. Therefore, those bankers who by law are compelled to guarantee their depositors for the general welfare of the people, should not be required to bear alone the extraordinary expense to which nearly all new ventures in their pioneer days are subject, and especially not in the trying days of the bankers of Oklahoma.

For these reasons I find it most equitable, just and fair that your state in a small degree aid the banks in the good cause by exempting them from taxation, which, as soon as conditions become normal, may be repealed. Whatever this aid may be, it will not amount to a thousandth part of the benefit the people of the state derive from the deposit guaranty. There can be no doubt that if this is brought to the attention of the legislature and the people, all will be heartily in favor of it.

This is one step I advise you to take. But as the progressive Oklahomans can solve more than one problem at a time, I will present another which, if inaugurated, would greatly safeguard banking, and that is, to encourage the organizations of insurance companies, or existing casualty companies, to insure commercial notes.

Commercial Note Insurance

The safety of most banks depends upon the safety of its loans. I am reminded of a bank that failed in my city owing to losses sustained on commercial notes negotiated through its Chicago reserve bank. If these notes had been insured, the bank would be doing business today. While the standing or rating of the maker of a note is easily ascertained, yet, as some rated into the millions, have failed, all are looked upon with suspicion, although only a small number of them fail.

In the earlier days of my banking we had invested about $100,000 in commercial notes bought from brokers. After having our fingers burnt on only one of them, we mistrusted all, and took no more unless secured in some shape, even if the interest rate was 1 per cent lower than on the unsecured. If these notes could be insured they would prove the most attractive bank investment.

When our bank in 1907 had all its deposits in its reserve banks insured with casualty companies at $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent premium, I had a long conference with the agent trying to interest him to induce all casualty or bonding companies to add commercial note insurance to their lines. I also called attention to the plan in banking and other journals; also brought it before the American Bankers convention, where I was encouraged that it had at last taken root, as it was reported that large interests were contemplating the organization of such companies, and I am disappointed and surprised that as yet they have not materialized.

But let me predict that it will not be long before we will be able to insure all our loans and discounts. What a relief this will be to the banker and how much will it tend to strengthen the banks.

It does seem that such insurance would be far safer, more profitable and less expensive to obtain than the insuring or bonding of politicians, as is often done for over \$100,000, on a single risk, at $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent premium, for these generally have but a little of their own. Or than insuring outstanding book accounts, which is so much more complicated and has no definite limit, while a note has, and a guaranty stamp on the back completes the policy, a most simple affair.

The field for such insurance is yet unexplored and offers an immense amount to be insured, and I am confident it will prove the most profitable enterprise yet undertaken.

As near as I can ascertain the losses on commercial notes is about $\frac{1}{8}$ of the loss by fire, hence a company of \$1,000,000 capital could insure 1,000 million dollars of commercial notes with the same safety as a fire insurance company of the same capital could insure 125 million dollars, as the fire companies on the average insure about \$125 on \$1.00 capital.

But let us assume a company insured only one-half of the safe limit, that is 500 million dollars on one million capital, and receives on an average $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent premium. This would bring an income of \$1,250,000, allowing 50 per cent of the premium for losses, would net \$625,000, and after allowing 25 per cent premium for expenses would leave a clear gain of \$312,500, or $31\frac{1}{4}$ per cent on one million dollar capital. Almost too good to be true. I do not guarantee that it is, and I do not expect that any one will enter upon this new field without further and thorough investigation, but I feel positive that this line of insurance has a better prospect of success than any other.

It does seem that the required capital for such companies could be obtained easily as the large borrowers, the brokers, and the banks, all directly interested in such insurance, would freely subscribe to such stock. There ought to be four $1,000,000 companies or, if existing casualty or bonding companies can be prevailed upon to add commercial note insurance to their lines, we might get this insurance without new companies. Such insurance would also be of great help to worthy borrowers.

There is no question in my mind that if all bankers conventions would hold out inducement to the insurance world by the passage of a resolution, promising encouragement and patronage to such companies entering this field, this I think, would soon hasten their establishment.

My Banking Experience

Now let me give you a bit of history of my banking experience. The first time I stepped into a bank and endeavored to open a bank account was when a boy, fifty-seven years ago, which our democrats are fond of recalling as the good old democratic times, when free trade, free whiskey, free banking and wildcat currency were in vogue. I think free love was not an issue then, or perhaps I was too bashful and young to comprehend it. I assisted my father in his country store. Many times I had to write apologetic letters to our wholesale merchants, for not paying our bills when due. It was at this time that a young dashing fellow opened up the first bank in our village.

I said to father, "Why, this is splendid. This will be a great boom to our town, now I will not need to write any more of those humiliating, apologizing letters. There are a string of overdue bills on the pin. I guess I had better get drafts for them at the bank and give it our note." "Yes," he said, "you had better try."

So, with the greatest confidence I took my first step into a banking room, engaged the banker and displayed my little list of drafts wanted, amounting in all to about $200.

"Well," asked the banker, "have you an account or deposit here?" "Why, no," I replied. "If I had, I would not come around begging." Then he commenced to give me a lecture on banking rules, which I could not understand nor agree to. I differed with him on his rules and nearly everything else he tried to teach me, and I argued that a bank would receive deposits from those who had a surplus, and give or loan it out to those poor fellows, like myself, who had use for it.

He felt insulted that a young kid should have the audacity to attempt lecturing him on banking. Finally I asked: "So you refuse to give me those drafts for which I will give my note?"

"Yes," he said, "seeing you have no deposit here."

This aggravated me to the limit of my patience, and in an excited, loud voice, I said, "Then you might as well proclaim that you are busted." At this he came from behind the counter in a hurry and in a threatening manner, as if he were going to bust me. Suspecting how he intended to satisfy my loan, I opened the door, slammed it shut with such force that one of the panes of glass broke. He ran after me for half a block, then gave up the race and I safely arrived at our store. This was not a run on a bank, but a run out of it, and which the bank withstood without the least commotion. But in less than a year the scales were turned. Then there was a run on the bank which it could not withstand, and it failed.

At the time I was refused a loan, the banker had his new bank building under construction. A very pretentious building for those times, and the only three story building in town, and the very building I am banking in this day.

Before I finally opened the bank in 1884, and in order to acquire more definite information of what a bank's average losses on loans were, which to me seemed the most important feature of the business, I visited our neighboring cities for investigation, assuming that if I could get old bankers' experience free of cost, it would save me the high price of personal experience in the future. Not expecting that all would obligingly give me the benefit of their costly experience, and not wishing to be too inquisitive, I asked if one per cent would about cover the average annual loss on bank loans.

As the majority of bankers are loth to admit losses, most of them answered that it was practically nothing, others that one fourth of one per cent would be ample, and all agreed that one per cent was hardly conceivable.

The last I interviewed was the cashier of a large Chicago bank, who was the most frank of all. "Why," he said, "losses, of course we have losses; what bank has not? Only a few days ago a broker failed who owed us $75,000. Of course we hold collateral but I am satisfied if we get out of it with a $10,000 loss. But this is nothing; the question is how much can you afford to lose and still pay eight per cent dividend and add to surplus, which we have been doing for these many years."

At this disclosure I was first astounded, but after a little reflection I was reminded that the bank had over $7,000,000 loans, on which a $10,000 loss would be only one-seventh of one per cent. This same cashier's bank failed in 1895, owing to trying to finance a street railway company.

After having gathered all information on banking to my satisfaction, active operation was commenced. For the first ten years we credited to a reserve fund each year one per cent on our average bills receivable, which amount was charged to loss and gain account, the same as an expense. Against this reserve account we charged each year our bad paper. Finding that our losses had not been one-half of one per cent, we, during the last seventeen years, credited the reserve fund, only one-half, instead of one per cent, and in this wise our reserve fund gained about $34,000. On our bond and real estate loans we allowed nothing for losses, and practically had none.

Bank Investments

Now let me tell you how I consider the different loans of a bank based on my own experience, which I think will apply to banks generally. The safest and highest interest bearing are first real estate mortgages on farms at about $\frac{3}{4}$ of actual value; second, on city or village real estate at about two-thirds value; third, factories, the value of which is a very uncertain element; if times are good, as they have been during the last decade, when most of all are prosperous, the value may be sustained, but if in depressing times a factory does not prosper, or is losing money, in such cases the property value may shrink as much as eighty per cent. I am reminded of a factory which cost \$40,000 on which a \$10,000 first mortgage was foreclosed, and after years of effort the factory was finally sold for \$8,500. Such depreciation on farm or city real estate is not possible.

Therefore, real estate mortgage loans on manufacturing plants should be only made in limited amounts, and with the greatest caution. That real estate mortgages are the safest and most profitable investments is shown by the insurance company who invest largely and while these are mostly in large amounts on city real estate, which I consider not as safe as in smaller amounts on farm property, yet in these but a trifling loss is sustained. Why real estate mortgages are prohibited as a national bank loan is a mystery. There is not a word in the National Bank Act, which prohibits it."

C. W. Allendoerfer Opposes Reserve Plan

C. W. Allendoerfer, First National, Kansas City, read an ably prepared paper in which he carefully reviewed the National Reserve Association plan and found it in many things weak or objectionable. In part he said

For a long time students have recognized that there are certain serious defects in our banking and currency systems, while libraries have been written on the subject and many a weary hour at conventions like this have been given to discussion of the problem. It is not my purpose, therefore, to speak at any length concerning these defects. We are pretty well agreed as what they are and I shall mention them briefly only in order that we may consider the plan before us will cure them.

First: It is practically impossible to unite all or even a large number of banks in common action or policy. Some clearing house cities have in the last four years adopted methods for co-operation among themselves and the desirability of a wider application of these principles has been emphasized by their successful operation in those cities. To digress just a moment, let me say here, that in a general way the whole plan is an enlarged edition of the clearing house idea as applied in our most progressive cities.

Second: The wastefulness of our present cash reserve system and the striking manner in which it defeats its own purpose in times of stress.

Third: The inflexibility of our note issue.

Fourth: The economic waste of using reserve money in ordinary business transactions.

Fifth: The lack of a discount market and the mutually evil influence of the interest rate and stock gambling.

Sixth: The embarrassment of having an independent government treasury where from time to time vast sums are stored to the direct detriment of business interests.

Many plans have been suggested which offered relief from one or two of these ills, but until about five months ago none had been proposed which was broad and comprehensive enough to cover all the points without seriously disarranging systems already in existence. No doubt it would have been more graciously received in this section had it been presented by some one other than Senator Aldrich; but the plan itself appears more and more masterful as we study it and I believe that eventually it will have the endorsement of all good bankers in this state.

I invite you then to an impartial consideration of its details. I shall refer from time to time to the changes suggested by the currency commission of the American Bankers Association, the first of which is a change in the name from the Reserve Association of America to National Reserve Association of the United States.

Perhaps the greatest objection to the proposed plan has been based on the fear that the Reserve Association of America would be controlled by the large interests in New York and that, to a greater extent than ever, the reserves of western banks would be at the mercy of Wall Street and in a sense cause the demoralization of the stock market.

St. Paul and Minneapolis

Elbridge C. Cooke, president of the Minneapolis Trust Company, has gone abroad, also G. F. Orde, vice-president of the First National, A. A. Crane, vice-president of the First National, has taken up his summer residence at Lake Minnetonka. E. W. Decker, who has been out of the Northwestern National for several weeks through direction of his surgeons, has been down occasionally to see how things are running in his absence.

Other bankers are going about the country attending group meetings. J. A. Latta of the Northwestern, S. H. Bezoier of the Security National, P. J. Leeman of the First attended the Third group meeting at Hastings. J. L. Root of the Minneapolis Trust, L. E. Wakefield of the Wells & Dickey Company, R. E. Macgregor of the Northwestern, Kelsey Chase, superintendent of banks, and Mr. Bezoier and Mr. Leeman went to the Seventh meeting at Montevideo. Mr. Leeman and Mr. Root went to the meeting at La Crosse.

Hastings Meeting

At the Hastings meeting officers were elected as follows: President, John Heinen, Hastings; vice-president, C. J. Sargent, Red Wing; secretary and treasurer, A. W. Swanson, Cannon Falls; executive committee, R. W. Putnam, Red Wing, and C. W. Gress, Cannon Falls. J. A. Latta spoke on "Opportunities and Obligations of Present Day Bankers"; C. F. Staples on "Transportation;" Senator

Albert Schaller on "The Law in Banking;" H. A. Seriver of the St. Anthony Falls Bank of Minneapolis on "The Gleaning of the Field;" L. E. Wakefield on "Banking Investments;" E. A. Whitford of Hastings on "Our Sign," and C. O. Hall of Red Wing on "Time Locks."

MUSCOGEE (OKLA.) NATIONAL BANK

The Muskogee National Bank was organized from a state bank only five days prior to the enactment of the Oklahoma state guaranty law. The wisdom of the action taken at that time has been proved by the many state banks recently in Oklahoma converting into the national system. It took a great deal of nerve and judgment to change to a national bank at the time when the guaranty law appeared to be very popular and which did serve as a great advantage to state banks at that time.

A. C. TRUMBO
Vice-President and Cashier Muskogee National

During the first year's history of the guaranty law in Oklahoma the Muskogee National practically stood alone in having made the change and it was criticised by many of its friends for doing the thing that its officers considered good judgment. The position was taken by this bank that it was safer for its own customers than if it would act as a guarantor for other banks whose managers were strangers and untried in the banking world.

It would seem that the national banks in the state of Oklahoma should appreciate the judgment of officials of this bank and as Muskogee is a reserve city the best way to show this appreciation would be by opening an account with the Muskogee National.

Muskogee has made a wonderful growth in the last ten years. According to the federal census ten years ago Muskogee had less than 5,000 people, to-day Muskogee has between 25,000 and 30,000 population and is growing very rapidly. It is perhaps one of the best and liveliest little cities anywhere to be found in the United States, and it would pay any one who has never seen Muskogee to spend a few hours here at least and in doing so it would be well to make the acquaintance of A. W. Patterson, the president, or A. C. Trumbo, the cashier, of this growing institution in the Southwest.

COMPTROLLER MURRAY REFUSES TEMPTING OFFER

Most of the local banking interests that believe in fostering good banking practices have been pleased to learn of the denial on the part of Lawrence O. Murray, comptroller of the currency, that he intended to resign. Mr. Murray has enforced some rules that did not meet the approval of bank officials but his efforts as a whole have, and his work as comptroller commands the respect of Chicago bankers.

"UNITED STATES LOAN BANK robbed by a thug," is the head line in an evening paper. Wasn't even a private bank—only a pawn shop. Can you beat the "easy" banking law of Illinois?

DID you see where the Chicago "labor leader" committed suicide by going into the same saloon with some other "labor leaders?" City detectives present arrested the corpse with 12 bullet holes in it. They captured his revolver with five empty shells in it but all the other guns and gun men escaped.

BLACK-HANDERS did not get far with W. S. Webb, cashier of the Missouri Savings at Kansas City. A decoy letter brought an arrest of a probably demented man. CASHIER.

endorsed by the grocer, the baker and candlestick maker. I leave out of the trio the butcher because paying his notes is too much like paying for dead horses. We like all kinds of little notes except those of the lightning rod decorator and of the insurance persuader. We like the note of a merchant who discounts his bills and who pays us as religiously as he does other people. We like farmers' notes given for feeding cattle, with or without mortgages. We like the note of him who has wheat in the bin. We like the note of John William Jones who is so stingy that he uses six penny nails for cuff buttons and wakes the roosters out of sound sleep as he hammers around doing chores. We like the notes of old maids who sew for a dollar a day and we steer clear of brilliant young men who have a hundred a month outgo on a twelve dollar a week income. And we always accept prepayments, day or night, counting as the least of failings the desire of a maker to translate his promise to pay into real money.

In conclusion, I beg to offer a few brief words about the Central Bank or the National Reserve Association, as it is called, not that it is any part of the province of this paper to discuss that theme but because I wish to talk about liquidation. I have always believed that if such an institution is ever established in this country and authorized to issue circulating notes, it must confine its loans to liquid ones and enforce payment at maturity. Otherwise it would become an instrument of wild expansion. If it would so confine its loans to notes which will be paid when due, and thus exert a powerful influence over the banks desiring to discount with it, to confine their loans to those of this acceptable character it would in this particular present a very great, if not its chiefest virtue.

At fancy's call, we may bring to mind a tragedy of life. Along a railroad track in bleakest winter time, a tramp is walking, chilled, and wearied and discouraged in the increasing cold. Down by the side of the embankment he sees a dark object,—a great block of coal rolled from some passing tender. He sits down beside it, as a little shelter and he leans upon it. It is as cold and unresponsive as so much ice. By and by he dreams of home, and light, and life and better days until finally even dreams cease, life's fitful struggle o'er.

And yet within that cold and inert block is heat enuf, and light enuf and power enuf, if they could only be released by some potent hand, to give more heat and light and accomplishment in homes and in factories than even dreams can conjure forth.

Banking is that mystic, mighty force. It takes the scattered dollars of waste,—moneys inert and useless as they exist diffused and idle and makes of them a potential force. The mass becomes a mighty power. And be it known that this world need have no fear of power centralized, if rightly directed,—it should have every distrust of power diffused. But power centralized calls imperatively for management that it run not astray. The engine which is mightily constructive may become mightily destructive and as with all runaway engines, it destroys others and it destroys itself.

I believe that we, men of Missouri and of Nebraska, of Kansas and of Iowa, confessing ourselves as mere units in the great whole, yet owe it to ourselves and to our profession that our influence be exerted in behalf of cleaner and stronger conditions, and these clean and safe conditions will be most effectually promoted by having in our vaults, contracts payable as in the days of Abraham of old, "in money, current with the merchants."

To Improve Missouri-Pacific

St. Louis bankers have been advised that B. F. Bush, the new president of the Missouri-Pacific, will immediately put into effect a policy of vastly improving the system in Missouri, and it is believed the same policy will be eventually pressed into other states traversed by the railroad. While the improvements will be financed largely in New York, an enormous part of the work will derive its sinews from St. Louis financial institutions. Practically all the subcontractors will deal with local banks and trust companies, so that in the end the burden of the financing will devolve on this center. Mr. Bush has been feasted and lionized by the best part of the local business community, and given assurance of hearty co-operation by the St. Louis banking fraternity.

J. F. Kreidler is president of First National at Michigan City since Walter Vail's death.

Tennessee Session

Nashville, May 30.—The two day session of the Tennessee bankers convention opened at the Hotel Hermitage yesterday morning at 10 o'clock. President D. M. Armstrong of Memphis called the session to order and presided. Ben. W. Hooper, the youthful governor of the state, welcomed the delegates, and Jo T. Howell also delivered an address of welcome on behalf of the Nashville clearing house banks. The response was made by J. F. Brownlow of Columbia, after which President Armstrong delivered his annual address. The speech de resistance of the entire program was an address by John Perrin, chairman of the board of the Fletcher American National at Indianapolis upon the national reserve association plan of monetary reform. His address in large part will be found printed in another portion of this issue of THE CHICAGO BANKER. He was listened to by a large audience and vigorously applauded. The Monday morning session concluded with the report of Treasurer Neill Wright of Huntington, and by Secretary F. M. Mayfield of Nashville. The afternoon session of Monday was given over to the state bank section of which P. D. Houston is president. This section had a report from its secretary-treasurer, G. C. Wilkerson of Jackson and from the chairman of its legislative committee, W. A. Sadd of Chattanooga. The balance of the session was given over to a general discussion of the proposed new banking law for Tennessee.

Tuesday Session

The Tuesday morning session convened at 9 A. M. and heard the report from the chairman of the executive council, Wesley Drane of Clarksville, followed by a report of the protective committee made by V. I. Witherspoon of Nashville. The event of the second meeting was an address on the American Bankers Association by its vice-president, Wm. Livingstone of Detroit. Captain Livingstone is a great favorite with Nashville bankers, having made a great hit at the council banquet with an address which was distinguished for its brilliancy and its wit. After the address of Captain Livingstone, there were ten minute speeches on general banking conditions by various speakers representing the several congressional districts of the state. The morning session concluded with routine business and the afternoon was given up to entertainment furnished by the clearing house banks.

Address of President Armstrong

President D. M. Armstrong reviewed the growth and history of the Tennessee Association, which was organized 21 years ago at Memphis. The present day activities of the association were presented in attractive form. Concerning the recent failure to pass of the new Tennessee banking bill Mr. Armstrong said:

Year after year the officers and committees of our association have urged upon the legislature their duty to depositors, but without success. At the risk of criticism, I have perhaps been more active in pressing this matter than any of my predecessors. Actuated by the desire to have a modern code of banking laws passed by the legislature during my administration.

At the Tennessee Convention

WILLIAM LIVINGSTONE
DETROIT

D. M. ARMSTRONG
MEMPHIS, TENN.

Mr. Livingstone of Detroit is a banker, a sailor and an orator. He also is the vice-president of the American Bankers Association and next year will be its president, at which time the convention will be in Detroit. He was orator of the day at the Nashville convention of the Tennessee bankers on Monday.

Mr. Armstrong as president of the Tennessee bankers confined his annual address, in large part of necessity, to a new banking law in Tennessee, putting all forms of banking under supervision and inspection. The address, printed elsewhere, is well worth reading.

California

Secretary R. M. Welch has sent out his literature for the June 15th, 16th and 17th convention at Lake Tahoe. Headquarters will be at the Tavern and complete train and rooming arrangements have been made. Stoddard Jess of Los Angeles and John Perrin of Indianapolis are two of the chief speakers.

Friday forenoon and afternoon will be devoted to two business sessions. W. R. Williams, state superintendent of banks, will speak on "Banking Laws and Supervision of Banks." State Treasurer E. D. Roberts will make a short address on "Depositing State Funds in Banks." J. G. Spangler, president of the Arizona Bankers Association, will speak concerning the "Relationship between the Bankers of Arizona and California." It is expected that W. J. Harris, president Nevada Bankers Association, will also contribute a number to the program. Geo. E. Allen, educational director American Institute of Banking, will explain the educational work of that organization.

It is quite likely that Hon. Geo. E. Roberts, director of the mint, will attend the convention, in which case he will contribute an address.

The annual address of the president, together with reports of the protective committee, legislative committee, committee on revision of constitution and reports of other officers and committees will all have a part in the program, a complete copy of which will be mailed to you in due course. A fine entertainment program has been arranged.

John V. Clarke

John V. Clarke, for twenty years president of the Hibernian Bank, of this city, died of pneumonia, after a brief illness, on Wednesday morning. Mr. Clarke was but twenty-eight years old when he succeeded his father as president. His career was very successful and he was a valued member of many clubs and charity organizations. He was a director of the clearing house which met and passed resolutions. Louis B. Clarke, vice-president, is acting president of the Hibernian and is expected to be elected to that position at a directors' meeting early next week.

THREE NEW POSTAL BANKS

Postmaster-General Hitchcock has designated Ottawa, Staunton and Collinsville as Illinois postal savings banks. They will receive deposits after June 27th. Sheldon, Iowa, and Emporia, Fort Leavenworth, and Osage City, Kansas, are also designated.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

THE cuts of John S. Broeksmit, the new cashier of the Harris Trust, in the last issue of THE CHICAGO BANKER, in some hot weather way, changed places with that of C. W. Allendoerfer of Kansas City. Both are good looking and good bankers and judging from the number of letters received "calling attention" to the mix-up the cuts might have been run without names. Even a cross-eyed banker down at Kankakee got it straight. Nothing like being well known.

FRANK J. JOYNER may become a Chicagoan, at least it is up to him to say on a good thing. No, particulars not ready.

THE stock market is all right. The customers are backward—that's all!

BEFORE he said one word about it, Taft is said to have read the Standard Oil decision completely through twice. A lot of editors who are anxiously trying to explain their first views could have saved a lot of trouble by doing the same thing. Too much politics and too little thought spoils the Editorial page.

IOWA bankers can make their reservations on the Train de Luxe to New Orleans convention through Secretary P. W. Hall, at the Iowa convention. Mr. Hall is quite active in seeing that Hawkeye bankers do not get left.

SECRETARY C. E. HOYT, of the Connecticut Bankers Association, is conducting important negotiations for his executive council with the New York clearing house. The proposal is direct clearings, no charges, and a saving on Connecticut collections of not less than three days. Certainly this is good banking and ought to encourage B. B. Castle in his efforts to perfect arrangements for upper Illinois banks with the Chicago clearing house.

OREGON CONVENTION June 9th and 10th will be held at Portland. Secretary J. L. Hartman, Portland, has sent out programs.

WILLIAM H. BURGESS of El Paso told the Missouri bankers at their Kansas City convention the story of our "International Commerce" and it is a pity he could not be brought to Chicago to elaborate the story for the Chicago Association of Commerce. There are a lot of points that men of one kind of business may have overlooked. Mr. Burgess is an attorney and a mighty shrewd one. He'd make good.

GROUP TEN, Illinois, met at Murphysboro on Friday. E. E. Mitchell (state treasurer) of Carbondale was the chairman and E. B. Jackson of Marion the secretary. This group has been ably represented on the state executive council by J. S. Aisthrope (11), D. W. Karraker (12) and J. F. Mackey (13) and by Chairman Mitchell ex officio.

NEXT week Illinois group meetings will be held as follows: Group Eight at Carrollton, Wednesday, June 7th and Group Five, Friday, June 9th at Pontiac. E. H. Miner at Winchester is secretary of Group Eight and John J. Doherty of Dwight is secretary for Group Five.

BANK COMMISSIONER J. N. DOLLEY of Kansas: "I am pleased to say that business conditions in Kansas are very satisfactory indeed, and banking conditions normal. We have experienced in Kansas, as in all of the other states of the Union during the past year, a re-adjustment period—taking an inventory and cleaning house, and after the inventory has been completed and analyzed, I bring you this message, that as far as the Kansas state banks are concerned they never were in a stronger, cleaner and more solvent condition than they are to-day. Our deposits are increasing daily, reserves are strong, assets are clean, management of the banks creditable, and we have no apologies to offer for our stewardship as custodians of the people's earnings and wealth entrusted to our care."

MR. DOLLEY further said, in addressing the Kansas bankers: "I am unqualifiedly in favor of the immediate reform of our monetary and financial system. I do not believe either that we should hesitate in dealing with this great proposition. I believe that we should face it, as our race has always faced great problems and disposed of them with courage, ability and honesty, and I am sure we will dispose of this problem effectively and well. An enlargement of the monetary commission's plans for currency reform should be worked out that permits the National Reserve Association to embrace within its scope all banks operating under state, as well as national charters."

MR. DOLLEY favors admitting the state banks and trust company banks to full privileges without robbing them of their present valuable functions as state institutions. This is good religion and you can count on Kansas being consulted when the matter is up for decision at Washington.

WE know of some high and mighty bankers who have failed thus far to get hotel accommodations at New Orleans, and, later they will be kicking good and hard. Our tip is the Grunewald. Best there is anyhow. Now don't fail to get a compartment on the big Train de Luxe, from Chicago. It will be the finest ever.

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, secretary of the treasury, told the Missouri bankers, in advocating the adoption of the National Reserve Association plan of currency reform, that "the administration has been careful to take no part until now in the discussion of plans for this great reorganization. While the formative discussions and the first settlement of general opinion were going forward, we have avoided an expression of opinion. We waited until the monetary commission and public opinion should have opportunity for expression. We wanted this great movement to take on the indelible color of a non-partisan reform."

THE secretary also said, "the truth is that a great advance in monetary thought has taken place in this country during the last few years—at first by reason of the emphatic agitation of the subject among the bankers and publicists, and later by the added reason of the activities, methods and publications of the monetary commission. The fact that the panic of 1907, with all of its old-fashioned features, took place in the midst of this intellectual monetary uplift contributed a great impetus and produced a great enlightenment. It was indeed the occasion of the monetary commission; being a final demonstration of the barbaric quality of certain essentials of our monetary system. Every body knows that our system in many of its features is of wonderful excellence and fitness. These great features nobody thinks of abandoning."

MR. MACVEAGH tried to get the bankers to view Mr. Aldrich apart from his tariff record, but western bankers do not consider the ex-senator as the real author of the reform they hope for. To them it is the National Reserve Association plan. The "Aldrich plan" was a miscue at the best. Aldrich was a skilled log-roller, never a statesman. We favor Mr. MacVeagh's alternative of "considering the plan detached from Mr. Aldrich."

THE best thing the secretary got off was his conclusion as follows: "Well, after hearing me say these fine sayings about Mr. Aldrich some of you will say: 'well, we are sorry for MacVeagh. He is another good man gone wrong. The atmosphere of Washington has been too much for him.' And everybody there agreed."

THE joy-riding chauffeur and the glad-hand banker are passing away. The courts are deciding that the unauthorized use of an owner's car by the chauffeur is theft and the glad-hand fellow—well he's out of style at the clearing house and that settles it.

TAFT'S reciprocity took on new life the moment Root came out into the open as an opponent and the National Reserve Association plan took a big leap in public favor when they quit calling it the Aldrich plan, which at best never was a truth. It was a case of borrowed plumage at best.

GREAT bargain at Springfield! Dollar administration tactics cut to 30 cents.

TARIFF bills should be so arranged that the steel trust, typewriter trust and all other tariff made monopolies should begin to cut prices at home and not abroad as now is the custom.

NEW state banks in Chicago, in the years just past, have paid and paid well. See the list of dividend payers in this issue, and of new ones about to open. Better look up the open territory. Banking is a good business and eminently respectable.

Plans for Monetary Legislation

John Perrin, member of the Currency Commission, delivers a scholarly address before the Tennessee bankers at Nashville

Nashville, May 30.—But few men could compress the proposed monetary legislation plan, formulated by the national monetary commission into one hour's address as John Perrin, chairman of the board of the Fletcher American National, Indianapolis, did to-day in an address before the Tennessee bankers convention at the Hermitage Hotel assembly hall. Much of it was confined to the technical difficulties and how they are to be overcome. Mr. Perrin said in part:

What the Banks Do

No agency contributes more than the banks of a state to the development of its natural resources and the upbuilding of its commerce and prosperity. They gather the savings of the wage earner and the surplus of the capitalist alike and infuse them with life and vigor to render efficient service for the general good. We may disagree in politics and find endless arguments in support of our respective parties. We may differ as to whether the general good will be best served by a protective tariff or a revenue tariff, by prohibition or regulation of liquor traffic, but among those of all classes and of the most diverse opinions there is absolute unanimity of conviction that all interests are best served by banks which are most safe, most stable, and most efficient. If we were all agreed as to the changes in the tariff laws which in final results would bring the greatest advantage to our ninety million people, we could not take a single step in bringing about those changes without affecting some interest adversely for the time being. But in enactments rendering banks safer and better no single interest of any kind is adversely affected, all are benefited. Eliminate the hazard of catastrophe which threatens the most solvent banks with every recurrence of panic, and the whole people will benefit through the greater constancy and more uniform efficiency of service which banks will be able to render. With hands and eyes and brain devoted to his work, a man can plow more and better than if he must carry a rifle and constantly watch for a lurking foe.

No laws can be devised which will eliminate among progressive peoples the recurring periods of overtrading and inevitable reaction which we call depression, but a good banking system will go far to restrain the one and mitigate the other, and will render a currency famine impossible.

Three Defects of Our Banking System

Let us now consider the main defects of our present banking system. As I see it there are lacking three essential elements:

1. An adequate restraint upon undue expansion of credit under normal conditions, and the means for an immediate large expansion of credit in a crisis.
2. Mobility of credits.
3. Flexibility in the volume of currency and its automatic expansion and contraction according to the fluctuating requirements of trade.

No Adequate Restraint upon Undue Expansion

Take the first point—the lack of restraint upon undue expansion under normal conditions and the means for immediate large expansion in a crisis. A bank operates for profit the same as does a saw mill, or a dry goods store. It is no more proper to expect that a bank will disregard profit and operate simply with a patriotic purpose of protecting the nation's commerce from disaster than that a saw mill will refuse orders because there is too much building, or that a dry goods store will refuse to sell silks and satins because of a tendency to extravagance.

JOHN PERRIN

A bank strives to be always moderately fortified for trouble, but it would obviously ruin its business to require its borrowers to pay their loans at the very time when the stress preceding a storm would make it most inconvenient and disadvantageous for them to do so. By enforcing payment of loans at such a time, an individual bank might put itself in position to meet in full its obligations to depositors, but would be serving its community very poorly; and if all banks sought to follow such a course there would be immediate panic and widespread disaster.

Normally a merchant has a certain amount of merchandise, certain accounts receivable and certain accounts payable, together with a moderate credit in bank subject to check. By sales he converts his merchandise into accounts receivable, these in turn, by collection, into a credit in bank subject to check, and this credit is used by checks to liquidate accounts payable. New accounts payable are created by further purchases of merchandise which again is converted into accounts receivable and these into a credit subject to check. So long as this process goes on rhythmically, no borrowing is necessary. If, however, sales or collections diminish, the rhythm is destroyed. Then the merchant appeals to the bank to furnish the funds to liquidate the maturing liabilities and take possession of the business as security, carrying it on until the rhythmical operation is restored, and the bank's advances repaid. If the merchant is left in charge, the essence of the transaction is the same, as he would in fact operate the business on behalf of the bank until it was repaid.

The greater the certainty with which banks can meet such legitimate needs of solvent borrowers, the better for the general welfare.

A bank, properly viewed, is also a merchant—a merchant of credits—and not a money warehouse as seems to be the popular conception. Its deposits are credits which the bank sells, paid for by the depositors with checks for more than 90 per cent, and less than 10 per cent with cash. The proceeds of such credits sold to depositors are invested in loans. In other words, it buys credits maturing at fixed future dates, and pays for them in most cases by giving demand credits subject to check, which illustrates clearly the fact that expansion of loans entails expansion of deposits. The converse is equally true. The bank maintains such modest proportion of cash reserve as experience teaches will suffice. In this continuous process of sale and purchase of credits, and regulation of cash reserve, every bank endeavors to keep all in harmonious relation, but if depositors' demands become abnormal, or if the punctual liquidation of bills receivable ceases, then the proportion of cash reserve shrinks unduly and the rhythmical operation is destroyed. Whither, under our system, may a bank turn to pledge its business until the rhythm is restored, as the merchant pledges to the bank? If the stress is local, a correspondent may assist, but if the stress is general all banks, suffering alike from shrinkage of reserve, are more or less helpless, and panic and semichaos ensue. We must then go through the process of disentanglement of the snarled skein and of slow readjustment.

Paul M. Warburg, a partner of Kuhn, Loeb and Company, who by personal experience has thorough familiarity with banking both in Europe and here, and who is a profound financial student, likens our present system of scattered reserves to a system of fire protection, in which each householder is given his individual share of the water, the law permitting him, however not to use it freely to quench the fire at its inception, but to use it only as fast as his building burns. If four stories, he could use one-quarter of his portion while the fourth story burned, another quarter for the third floor, but must save for the first floor the quarter provided for it. In case of a fire there would never be enough water, and each householder would have every temptation to steal his neighbors' supply. On the other hand, with the whole supply in a central reservoir, water would be applied effectively where needed and general protection afforded.

In like manner our banks and the vast business interests served by them would be safeguarded, if the principal money reserves of the whole country were gathered in one central credit agency whose primary function would be protection, not profit earning.

Such an agency, by its published lending rate, would continually fly a financial weather signal as a guide to all from day to day. A rising rate would be a restraint upon expansion of credit. If a storm should break, it would be able immediately and largely to expand its loans because of the vast lending power held in reserve and not used under normal conditions for profit. Banks thus supported would be able, even in time of severest strain, to meet the legitimate needs of their solvent borrowing customers.

Mobility of Credits

The second defect is lack of mobility of credits. Under existing conditions a customer's note must lie in a bank's portfolio until it matures. A correspondent, if appealed to to purchase it, is unfamiliar with the maker's standing, and a bank offering a customer's note for sale is a natural object of humiliating suspicion. Credits thus extended to customers are not marketable. They are immobile.

Bank acceptances, so much used in Europe, illustrate the reverse of this. Such paper grows out of a transaction in which a bank lends to its customer its credit instead of actual capital. A purchaser of commodities, whose responsibility or collaterals are satisfactory to his bank, arranges that, in consideration of an appropriate commission, it shall accept a draft drawn upon it by the seller, at say ninety days, for the amount of the purchase. When presented the bank accepts this, or, in other words, writes on the draft its agreement to pay it at maturity. This bill or acceptance is then salable in the open market, its marketability resting upon the strength of the accepting bank. Such a bank acceptance in Europe would be bought by any institution having funds to invest and might be bought in London for Paris, Berlin or Amsterdam account, and could readily be resold in the open market at any time, or rediscounted with one of the great central banks. At maturity it would be paid by the accepting bank, with which its customer by that time would have deposited funds for the purpose.

Such paper, because of its wide market, has the highest convertibility and commands the lowest rate in the money markets of Europe, materially lower than notes of the most responsible makers secured by highest grade collaterals. Our use of such acceptances would quickly create a market for them, a discount market, and surplus funds in any section would flow to other sections in need through the sale and purchase of such paper, thus establishing mobility of credits in this country. Commercial paper of this character would be our most liquid and convertible asset, and its use would keep funds in the channels of commerce. Now the only liquid loans to be had in this country are call loans to stock brokers on Wall Street, that is, loans subject to call any day and secured by New York Stock Exchange collaterals. A bank needs quickly convertible loans, both that it may be better able to meet depositors' unexpected demands and also to have funds available to accommodate borrowers. The competition for these Wall Street loans in times of slack commercial demand forces the rate down to a merely nominal one, as, for instance, now the rate is a fraction over 2 per cent. This gives a powerful incentive to speculation which would be absent if these funds remained in commercial channels. When funds thus forced out in Wall Street loans are again needed for commercial uses, these loans are called for payment. Then the competition on the part of the brokers to borrow forces the rate to an abnormally high point, sometimes 100 per cent per annum or more. Extraordinarily high rates, accompanied by ruinous selling of securities, naturally arouse gravest apprehension of disaster and all eyes center on Wall Street, to the great detriment of business in general.

Inflexibility in Volume of Currency

The third defect is the lack of flexibility in the volume of the currency. I have put this last as least important. Currency, while a natural incident of any comprehensive banking system, is only an incident and not its vital part, which, as Senator Aldrich puts it, is the organization of credit, and this is made possible only by massing the money reserves of the country in a central agency.

We use the term money rather loosely. The word suggests unconsciously gold or bank notes. When one goes to a bank and says he wishes to borrow money, doubtless this same picture is unconsciously in his mind. As a matter of fact, it is not money at all which he wishes to borrow. To borrow money would mean renting actual coin and paying interest for the satisfaction of possessing it. That is not the privilege for which he pays. The essence of a borrowing transaction is an exchange of credits with the bank. A borrower gives to the bank his promise to pay, and the bank gives him in turn its promise to pay, usually expressed by a credit upon its books subject to the borrower's order or check. If A borrows in order to pay B, he gives his check to B. If B presents the check at the bank's counter and asks that he be given for its amount, the bank extinguishes its liability to A by assuming a liability to B, but does not change the amount or character of its liability. If B asks for currency instead of a credit subject to check and the bank pays him in its own bank notes, being simply the bank's promises to pay money, again the amount of the bank's liability is not changed, though the form is changed from what has been called a book credit to a bank note credit. The bank obviously would be equally as able to pay actual money, gold, for its bank notes thus issued as it would to pay actual money for the book credit against which the check was drawn. Such a currency is a true banknote currency and is the only form of currency ever devised whose volume automatically adjusts itself to the requirements of trade. The use of such a currency enables a depositor to convert at will a credit subject to his check into bank notes and to reconvert bank notes into a credit subject to check. The conversion of credit from one form to the other in nowise changes the total of the bank's liability and in nowise disturbs the reserve of actual money held against its liabilities whichever way expressed.

Volume of Currency Required

The volume of currency necessary for the transaction of our business may perhaps be better understood if we consider the analogy of checks.

Every day there is a certain aggregate volume of transactions in the entire country settled by checks and a certain other aggregate settled by cash, checks in exactly the requisite volume issued and are promptly redeemed. There is never a redundancy or insufficiency. The volume of checks outstanding expands and contracts according to each day's fluctuating requirements. In the same way the requisite volume of currency is that which exactly suffices for the transactions settled by cash. The power to convert at will balances subject to check into bank notes would call into existence the proper volume of currency just as the power to draw checks creates the proper volume of checks. Facilities for reconvert bank notes, by deposit, into balances subject to check would promptly drive unneeded bank notes out of existence. Thus the volume of a true bank-note currency in circulation would be continuously adjusted exactly to the business requirements, just as the volume of checks is so adjusted.

Regardless of the wide fluctuations in the volume of cash transactions by reason of varying business conditions and fluctuating seasonal demands, we now have no means of so adjusting the volume of our currency. We had substantially the same volume during the panic of 1907, with its large requirements, that we had in 1908, when the volume of cash transactions was greatly less than prior to the panic. In the panic there was insufficient volume of currency—an absolute famine. In 1908 there was redundancy, resulting in a great piling up of lawful money in bank reserves, especially in New York, with the inevitable attendant evils, such as enforced speculation.

It is to correct such evils as the three main ones which I have mentioned, and provide adequate remedies that Senator Aldrich has suggested his plan for monetary legislation after most exhaustive investigation and profound study of the banking systems of the progressive countries of Europe and of our own situation. What he proposes is with peculiar ingenuity adapted both to our needs and to our present banking system, but in nowise departs in principle from the well-beaten paths of long and successful European experience.

He proposes a powerful central credit agency operating primarily for protection and not for profit, with a true bank note currency based on a gold reserve and commercial assets. Such a plan, wherever tried, has never failed to work efficiently, no matter under what diverse conditions of small country or large country, of republic or monarchy. No other system has ever worked effectively in the entire history of the world. Our present system, which is only an experiment, has broken down repeatedly in its half-century of trial, but we have complacently gritted our teeth and struggled along with the unnecessary burden as if it were a providential dispensation instead of something unwisely devised by man and easily remedied.

Certain amendments to the Aldrich plan have been suggested by the Currency Commission of the American Bankers Association and I shall feel at liberty to refer to the plan as thus

By C. C. Burford

The financial institutions of Bloomington are to have a strong member added to their number in the allied Illinois Savings and Trust Co., with capital stock of $100,000, and the Illinois Title and Trust Company with capital stock of $25,000. The business of these two concerns which are under one management will be modeled after the business of the Chicago Title and Trust Company.

The new companies will do a general title and trust business, including abstract, title guarantee, loan, trust and insurance departments. The loan and the abstract features will be developed first and the others as rapidly as possible. It has been decided that a general banking business will not be conducted and no money will be loaned except on real estate mortgage. Bloomington financiers believe that much of the loan business which has heretofore been leaving their city will now be kept in channels in their own community. There is a wide field for the extension of the companies and with the growing importance of Bloomington as a commercial center and the rich agricultural country surrounding there is an almost unlimited scope for business expansion.

Harris Addresses Home People

B. F. Harris, vice-president of the First National of Champaign, gave an illustrated address recently to the people of his home city on the trip which he took to the Panama Canal last February and March. Mr. Harris spoke easily and entertained his friends with a business-like discussion of the past, present, and future of the canal. His slides were well selected and the pictures proved a source of real interest and instruction to those present. Although a busy banker, bank builder, farmer, stock-raiser, and vice-president of the Illinois Bankers Association, Mr. Harris could add to his versatility by becoming a public lecturer.

We do not believe that he intends to enter lyceum work, however, but when his turn comes to lead the work of the state association, Illinois will have an executive who will keep up the excellent work of previous leaders in this work.

Lexington Banker Retires

John L. Langstaff, cashier of the Peoples Bank of Lexington has resigned his position and will retire from the banking field in his village where he has been a leader for thirty-six years. He has been associated with three banks in the town, assisted in organizing the State Bank of Lexington, and was active in the organization of the Peoples Bank. Lewis B. Strayer was elected to succeed him.

Bank Robbery Charged

H. Augustine Six, better known as Austin Six, of Springfield, has been arrested charged with the robbery of the First National of Blue Mound, near Decatur, a few months ago. Six is in jail in Decatur. He was indentified by Eli Peck, cashier of the robbed bank, as one of the hold-up men, but he stoutly defends his innocence and declares that he will have no trouble in freeing himself in the Macon county court.

Pekin Bank Enlarges

The contract for the new vault for the Farmers National of Pekin has been let and the bank will soon begin some extensive improvements and alterations. Every safety device known to withstand fire and burglars will be introduced. Directors and officers of the bank visited Canton, Streator, Bloomington, and Lincoln, and gathered some excellent ideas upon the recent improvements in bank equipment. It has been only a short time since the Farmers National was enlarged but the growing business of the bank demands more room and better vaults than they now have and the officers and the directors will use nothing but the best ideas in the remodeling.

Kansas Banking Conditions

President W. H. Burks delivers a splendid annual address at the Kansas City, Kansas, convention. Pays highest tribute to secretary Bowman

We are to be congratulated this morning upon the "setting" of this convention; it is ideal; here, in the metropolis of Kansas; and across the line the bankers of our sister state in our other Kansas City are opening their two days' convention. We shall be much together and enjoy some of the best things in common, such as addresses by men of nation wide prominence and the entertainment and recreative features so generously and lavishly provided by the bankers of Greater Kansas City. They are, as has been told you, all yours to enjoy.

At this juncture it is right and due you to have from me a brief recital of "deeds done" during the fiscal year of the association now closing. And first, to be fair, I must say that all credit for whatever progress has been made and successes achieved should be given our worthy secretary, Mr. Bowman: always alert and up and doing in a thorough, intelligent manner everything for our common welfare. Having been intimately associated with him and in touch with the affairs of his office, I want to tell you that we would not accomplish much without Walter Bowman.

The group meetings of last fall at Dodge City, St. John, Osage City, Belleville, Hiawatha and Independence were a great success in every way—good attendance, instructive and entertaining programs, banquets and auto rides. These group meetings should not be overlooked by the bankers. While I would not belittle the importance of the big convention, the best work by the members of the association is done in these meetings. The addresses and informal talks are in the main of local affairs and of special interest to the bankers within the limits of the several groups. In these meetings we learn to know one another—not as competitors, each seeking to secure the good business of his neighbor, but as broad gauge bankers and as good friends whose acquaintance is worth while cultivating.

Quite a number of our bankers have been visited in recent months by midnight customers—those who destroy your strongbox, and take your money without making formal application for a loan. Neither do they file with the cashier a financial statement for the guidance of the discount board. A great deal of money has been lost by the successful onslaughts of these desperate criminals—murderers as well as yeggmen, every one of them. Only a few have been arrested and brought to justice. Our last legislature, realizing the necessity of more drastic laws and severer penalties for burglars using explosives, put on our books a law which will drive many of these criminals out of our state. But that is not sufficient. This association should increase the reward of $200.00 for the apprehension and conviction of criminals caught in the act of burglarizing or holding up a bank, to $500.00 for each member of the gang arrested and proven guilty. The undertaking is fraught with great risk and the sheriffs and police officers should be liberally rewarded, commensurate with the danger to life incident thereto. Several of the states to the north of us have banded themselves together for a vigorous and aggressive campaign in an effort to drive from their borders or put in the penitentiary this criminal class. They have employed a detective who is an expert in this line of work and who knows these safe-blowers, most of them being ex-convicts and professionals. So effectual have been his efforts that but one or two bank robberies have been attempted in those states since the existence of their protective association. With the idea in mind of combining the states of Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Oklahoma and Arkansas in a similar organization, a call was sent out for a meeting of representative officers from the associations of the several states named. It was held in Kansas City, Missouri, on January 19th. There were officers present from each state in the group, and special agents of the national surety company. It was a splendid meeting and all agreed that we should organize a protective association as soon as our several bankers associations authorized it. I recommend that such amendments to the by-laws be adopted as will increase the amount of the reward to $500.00 for each burglar and will delegate authority to our protective committee to co-operate with the similar committees from the other states with the end in view of establishing a permanent protective association along the lines followed by the states now working under that plan with such good results. This will cost some money, but we are organized to protect and assist our members in every way possible.

At the meeting of the executive council held in Wichita, the president and secretary were authorized to contract with the Burroughs and Wales Adding Machine companies for the benefit and saving to our members and without profit to the association and also to close a deal with some standard typewriter company if a quantity price were given the individual purchasers. After a great deal of correspondence and work on the part of the secretary, an agreement was entered into with the Burroughs people to take within the year eleven machines at the price of ten, the association being bound to receive and pay for any unsold machines at the end of the year. A similar contract was made with the Wales company except a flat discount of 10 per cent was given on the purchase of ten machines. The deal for typewriters was finally consummated. In this case the association agreed to take and pay for any machines up to fifty, not sold at the end of the year, the banks purchasing to receive two tens off of list price. Mr. Bowman informs me that the first eleven of the Burroughs are sold and a second contract made. Eight of the ten Wales and forty-four of the fifty typewriters are also disposed of. The saving to the bank members thus far has been the snug sum of $1,438.00 and all within the last six to eight months. Overtures have come from all sorts of concerns dealing in bankers' supplies—from big burglar-proof safes to rubber stamps. It was deemed unwise to open a general supply store, so our operations are confined at present to the lines mentioned.

Another important venture was proposed and acted upon favorably by the executive council—the publication by the secretary of a monthly periodical with subscription free to the bank members. Four issues of "The Kansas Banker" are in your hands and I am sure every banker here will endorse without reserve the action taken in this matter. As an economic measure it is a great success. It has worked quite a saving in postage and stationery and our worthy secretary is such a good financier that the publication of the magazine thus far has cost the association nothing.

The arrangement made by our insurance committee over a year ago with a local, home company engaged in writing fidelity and special depository bonds still obtains, as does also the contract for burglary insurance. Fortunate indeed are the members of this association in having in our own state a company doing a general bonding business for banks only, else we would be paying a much higher rate for bonds. Owing to the low premium charge, the association's coffers are not overflowing with cash received from commissions, but the great saving to our members warrants the continuance of the contract, for the difference in the premium rate over our former contract will pay the membership dues in the association of every bank requiring as much as $10,000.00 to $20,000.00 of fidelity or depository bonds. Thus if a bonding trust existed we were instrumental in breaking it.

The last legislature gave the bank commissioner authority and power at his discretion to fix the rate of interest that may be paid by banks on time deposits. This is surely adding another burden to his already heavily loaded office. Fixing a rate equitable and fair to all and in all parts of the state the commissioner will find, in my judgment, one of the hard problems to solve, for 3 per cent in a certain locality, owing to local conditions, might be a greater drain on the earnings than 4 per cent in some other part of the state where interest rates are higher and money in more active demand. I am of opinion that in many localities where 3 per cent has been the rate for years or where no interest is paid, the banks are annoyed a great deal by customers who have the impression that by statute the banks are now compelled to pay 4 per cent.

Another late law which I fear is likely to cause trouble unless applied very carefully or not at all is where a bank is a designated depository for public funds other than state deposits and is being operated under the deposit guaranty law of the state or has a bond of indemnity issued by a surety company covering all classes of deposits it shall not be required to give a special depository bond to secure such public deposits. The opportunity might be easily and unwittingly given the "wildcatter" and liberal, reckless banker to amass a large sum of public moneys in his bank which would be used in every way save the right way and ultimately bring the guaranty law or surety company or both under suspicion. The old

MILWAUKEE

NEWS LETTER

By Mortimer I. Stevens

WISCONSIN

Financial and business conditions as pertaining to Milwaukee and the state in general show considerable improvement during the past few weeks and there is a decided tone for the better in all manufacturing lines. The demand for loans at the Milwaukee banks is about normal with the banks well supplied with cash and rates steady. Clearings for the past week show a slight increase over the same period for one year ago.

Among the bond houses there is a feeling that the sales for this year will far surpass the sales of previous years and this view is justified by the amount of bonds sold thus far in 1911. Competition in Milwaukee is much keener than a year ago and the sale departments of such leading houses as the Wisconsin Trust Company, Marshall & Ilsley Bank and the First Savings & Trust Company have within the past few weeks greatly augmented their forces.

Comes Out Boldly as Political Issue

A new campaign issue for progressive republicans was brought out at Madison during the past week when the senate, although it advanced to engrossment the Owen bill for insurance of bank deposits, indicated that the measure cannot pass the upper house at this session. The vote was 13 to 12 and the constitution requires a two-thirds vote of all members elected to pass a banking bill.

In closing his debate on the bill Senator Owen gave notice that the proposition would be taken up in the next campaign in this manner:

"If this legislature does not pass this bill it will be in the next platform of some political party and it will carry that party to victory." He added that the question was the safety of the depositor—"of people money"—not the interests of those who own stock in the 600-odd banks of Wisconsin.

Senator Owen declared further that the average dividend of the banks of the state is about 20 per cent, and in some cases it is as high as 35 per cent, and this statement was not denied by the bankers present.

"The banks make money," he said, "from your money and my money. They don't make it out of their capital. Is it any more than fair that they should be required to set apart some of this enormous profit to safeguard the man, who, perchance, has put his last dollar into a bank and yet does not know what night there may come a panic that will wipe him off the earth."

State Bankers Consider Mutual Insurance

Wisconsin state bankers, according to many rumors afloat, are considering the advisability of organizing a mutual company to insure bank deposits, according to George D. Bartlett, secretary of the Wisconsin Bankers Association, as quoted in the daily press. Mr. Bartlett says that the state insurance commissioner indorses the plan.

"A committee named at our last convention is outlining a plan but no definite action can be taken until the present law is amended," said Mr. Bartlett. "Bankers favor having their own inspector because the state inspection is private and the information obtained is not generally available."

Commissioner Calls for Bank Fees

Commissioner of Banking A. E. Kuolt recently notified the 542 state banks and trust companies that under the new law just passed by the legislature the fees for examination are now due and directing them to remit forthwith. The law as amended will require the banks to contribute $22,000 where heretofore the amount was about $8,000. The fee under the new law is based on total assets and the smallest is for banks having less than $100,000 a fee of $20. From $100,000 to $300,000 the fee is $35; from $300,000 to $500,000, $50; from $500,000 to $1,000,000, it is $75 plus $25 for each additional $1,000,000. The largest fee due under the present demand is $350. The law provides that payment is due prior to June 1st.

Bankers Meet at La Crosse

Sixty bankers, representing the members of Group Seven of the Wisconsin Bankers Association, met at La Crosse May 25th, in annual meeting. Mayor John Dengler welcomed the delegates and S. W. Brown of West Salem responded. In the afternoon recent legislation and the relation of the banker to the public was discussed. The delegates were given an automobile tour and in the evening attended a theatre party, followed by a luncheon at the La Crosse club.

The following officers for the ensuing year were elected: President, A. W. Barney, vice-president Bank of Sparta; Vice-President, E.

Notary Public Bill is Killed

Banks in Wisconsin which are in the habit of having an officer or stockholder act as notary public in acknowledging or protesting any paper in which the bank may be a party should ask their attorney's advice before continuing such practice. The speaker of the assembly at Madison recently advised his fellow members that such practice should not be allowed the bankers.

Promoted to Assistant Cashiership

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Merchants and Manufacturers Bank of Milwaukee, held May 22d, Albert Froede, Jr., former head bookkeeper and mail clerk, was promoted to the position of assistant cashier, made vacant when E. C. Knoernschild, who formerly held that position, was promoted to cashier.

Mr. Froede has been in the employ of the bank for the past four years in various positions and by his courteous manner and close attention to business has made many warm friends not only among the bankers but in the business world.

Warning Issued from Headquarters

A warning has been recently issued from association headquarters to the bankers of the state to watch for the appearance of a swindler who has been operating in North Dakota and is expected to continue in Wisconsin. He represents himself as an agent for a well known trust company and claims to be locating agencies for securing farm loans. After blanks have been filled out and an "agency" established he usually asks to have a check cashed claiming to be short of ready money. He is reported as a fraud and described as being about 5 ft. 6 in. tall; is heavy set weighing about 160 pounds with gray hair and walks with a limp.

News Items of Wisconsin Banks

State banks are to be placed on a parity with national banks as far as qualifying as depositories for savings is concerned. The senate has reconsidered its recent action in indefinitely postponing this measure and after adopting some slight amendments has ordered the measure advanced.

Owners of Chicago Bank Stocks

Both bankers and the public are interested in the bank stock list of owners in Chicago's big banks. It shows conclusively that they are shareholders' concerns and that they are not "dominated" in any sense by corporation or "big interests." The list is a long one and only the principals can be given. The figures reveal that J. Ogden Armour is the owner of the largest number of bank shares and that he probably has the largest investment in the stock of the local banks.

A brief summary of J. Ogden Armour's principal bank stock holdings shows:

	Shares	Market value
Continental and Commercial	9,350	$2,600,000
First National.....	250	105,000
Live Stock Exchange.....	500	120,000
Illinois Trust and Savings..	626	310,000
Central Trust.....	1,286	219,000
Northern Trust.....	150	47,000
Total	12,162	$3,401,000

Mr. Armour's total holdings are in excess of 12,000 shares. His principal banking interest is in the Continental and Commercial National, where he owns 9,350 shares, having a market value of about 2,600,000. In addition he has valuable interests in five or six other prominent banks, to say nothing of a possible interest in some of the smaller local institutions, and his holdings in the shares of the National City Bank in New York.

These figures do not include any of the bank stocks owned by Mr. Armour's mother or by any of the other members of the Armour family. In the Continental and Commercial alone Mrs. M. B. Armour has 3,276 shares, Lolita S. Armour has 800 shares and other members of the Armour family have several hundred more.

The value of the Armour bank stock holdings is approached by only a few others in the city. The W. H. Mitchell ownership in the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, which was for several years the most valuable single interest in local bank stocks, was diminished by gifts shortly before the death of Mr. Mitchell. There still are listed in his estate, however, 6,750 shares of the stock, having a market value of about $3,300,000.

Norman W. Harris is registered as holding 6,032 shares of the stock of the Harris Trust and Savings Bank. The market quotations on this stock have been around $3,000,000. Fred H. Rawson holds 6,895 shares of the stock of the Union Trust Company, having a market value of about $2,100,000, and Byron L. Smith holds 6,000 shares of the Northern Trust Company, having a market value of about $2,000,000.

A rather new interest of some importance in the local bank stock field is the Deering Harvester Company, which has acquired 2,000 shares of the First National, 2,000 shares of the Continental and Commercial National, 300 shares of the Corn Exchange National, 200 shares of Illinois Trust and 100 shares of Merchants' Loan.

The bank stock holdings of the Marshall Field estate have not been changed, of course. Its principal interest is in the Merchants' Loan.

The consolidation of the Continental and Commercial National Banks made the most important changes in local holdings that have occurred since the publication of the lists a

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, June 1.—Local bankers report an improvement in the general demand for credits, but the improvement is confined almost entirely to the country. Borrowers here are taking just as much money as usual, but St. Louis banks are not losing in cash on that account, because, it is claimed, so much local paper is being placed in the East, where slightly lower rates can be secured just now. Last week something over $1,000,000 of shoe paper was placed in New York at 3½ per cent, and other lines are borrowing correspondingly heavily in that territory. Now the banks here will not lend anything under 4 per cent, the belief being that it is not far off when a much better rate will be obtainable, and furthermore it is necessary for the local financial institutions to make preparations against the crop financing, so they are not eager to compete for profitless business. Throughout the West and in the territory immediately surrounding this center, the crop outlook continues excellent, but in the Southwest, through Arkansas, Oklahoma and sections of Texas, things are not as hopeful as was the case two or three weeks ago. The dry, hot weather has caused things to go backward. May and June is not a good time of the year for dry weather in the cotton belt. Moisture is needed for preliminary growth. In July and August not much more than heavy dews are required for cotton, but now rains would be welcome. Wheat estimates in Oklahoma and Arkansas are being reduced, but the high condition in Missouri is well maintained.

Outlook in the Southwest

Bankers returning from the conventions in Dallas, Oklahoma and Kansas City are somewhat divided in their opinions of the outlook in those sections. Texas shows general signs of prosperity, though more rain would do no particular harm. In Oklahoma the banking situation is all upset by the condition of the desposit guaranty proposition. Litigation and uncertainty prevails, and bankers are on the defensive. General business, though, is quite active, and a number of new enterprises are under way. All the travelers agree, however, that the three conventions were among the most successful ever held, and will be productive of beneficial results.

Something New Under the Sun

J. A. Lewis, cashier of the National Bank of Commerce, while attending the Missouri Bankers Association convention at Kansas City experienced a burst of enthusiasm during which he gave an interview in which he said integrity, experience, knowledge of human nature and fundamental qualifications of intellect and soul are necessary in banking, and capital is not essential. This was to illustrate the ideals governing finance, but in cold type it appeared otherwise, and Mr. Lewis has had a deluge of letters from all sections asking how one is to run a bank without funds. That his statement was literally construed is evidenced from the apparently sincere tone of the letters. Some were from old men who still had hopes of making something out of their lives, and others were from young men who believe themselves equipped with energy, experience and knowledge of human nature. "Please tell us" each writer pleads, "how to run a bank without capital." All week Lewis had been the joke center of the local banking fraternity. He has received numerous telephone messages and personal calls, the object of which is to get the proper "tip" for conducting a banking business sans money. It was suggested, finally, that Mr. Lewis organize a correspondence school for the instruction of such persons as desire to run banks without capital, the school to be known as the "J. A. Lewis Correspondence School of Finance and Lofty Ideals."

Bond Market Quite Active

In spite of the general lassitude in the local security market, the various bond houses and trust companies report fair activity in the bond business. The extremely plentiful and cheap money makes it reasonably easy to sell and underwrite bond issues, and the volume of this business in St. Louis during the last month has been heavy. Several irrigation propositions have been partially floated here, besides considerable railroad and equipment mortgages. John Nickerson, Jr., the original bidder for the $1,500,000 Lindell Railway 5s, falling due August 1st, 1911, has become a partner with the Eastern purchasers, and as a result the exchanging of the maturing securities for the new will be through his office. The group which now controls the bond includes W. S. Fanshawe and Company of New York, N. W. Halsey and Company of Philadelphia and New York and Mr. Nickerson.

Western Standard Oil Reorganization

Advices received by local bankers from Texas are to the effect that the reorganization of the Standard Oil properties in that state and in the entire Southwest will be largely through St. Louis. The Security Oil Company and the Southern Texas Company have increased their capital stock from $36,000,000 to $50,000,000 to handle the reorganization. The Texas corporations will make St. Louis the center of operations. Headquarters have been established in the Mercantile National Bank building, and the traffic and purchasing headquarters will be established here. The company is making improvements of various kinds in St. Louis, principally in distributing stations, which will cost about $1,000,000. Local capitalists are largely interested in the plans, and the banks here will aid in their financing.

New Sort of Bank Swindle

A clever swindler giving his name as James T. Strong, worked his arts upon the Bank of Furtuna, Missouri, securing by his efforts a snug sum over operating expenses. Strong represented himself as agent for the "New Orleans Home Trust Company" and claimed to be establishing agencies to make loans from that company. He carried blank applications and other stationery, which made his scheme look plausible. Strong persuaded the bank to make application for the agency, then succeeded in cashing a check purported to be drawn by the New Orleans Home Trust Company, payable to James T. Strong, general agent and signed by H. H. Moore, president. The check was protested and the bank advised that no such company existed in New Orleans. The Missouri bankers are now offering a reward for Mr. Strong.

More Postal Banks for Missouri

Three additional postal savings banks were ordered established in Missouri this week, which will begin business on June 27th. The banks will be situated in Moberly, Mexico and Trenton. The banks so far in operation in this state have been among the most successful in the system, and the postmaster-general announces that he will increase the number materially before the end of this year.

The Kobusch Suit

Considerable comment was caused by the filing of G. J. Kobusch, formerly president of the St. Louis Car Company, of a suit to recover $409,735 from the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, the sum representing alleged overcharges in the form of commissions on loans aggregating $2,000,000 made by the trust company to Mr. Kobusch. Breckenridge Jones, president of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, in a statement denied the allegations made by the complainant. "Except for cablegrams and other minor items, we made no charges against Mr. Kobusch," said Mr. Jones, "except as based on his written contracts. These contracts set out what the charges were to be before the services were rendered. The services, after being rendered, were approved by him. In most instances he closed the charge by giving his note and subsequently paid the note. The total amount paid by him is nowhere near the amount he mentions. He owes us nothing, and never did owe us anything like the amount mentioned. His claims are absurd.

Petition Mentions Big Loans

According to the petition filed by Kobusch, he was trying hard between 1905 and 1910 to keep his St. Louis Car Company out of the hands of a receiver. During that period he was a heavy borrower from the Mississippi Valley Trust Company. He paid 3 per cent commission for the loans, it is alleged, in addition to 6 per cent interest, but when he repaid all the loans recently, it maintained, he was informed there had been an additional commission of $409,735 charged against him for making these loans. He had to pay this amount before he could get the collateral security he had put up with the defendant company.

Miller Gets His Commission

G. A. Miller, assistant cashier of the Southern Illinois National of East St. Louis, has received his commission as bank examiner from the treasury department at Washington. He passed the examination by the comptroller's committee, and made an excellent showing. He will be assigned to the district in Missouri made vacant by the transfer of and promotion of Charles W. Watson. This territory embraces sections of the state outside of St. Louis and Kansas City. The appointment has the general approval of the Missouri banking fraternity.

The International Bank of Canada has deposited $250,000 with the Bank of Montreal in accordance with the Canadian banking act. The new bank will open for business early in June.

North Carolina

Secretary Wm. H. Hunt has sent out his program for North Carolina meeting at Lake Kanuga, Hendersonville, on June 21st, 22d and 23d. The place of meeting is ideal and the list of speakers is made up of men of high standing. Among them are Hon. Edward B. Vreeland, T. R. Preston, president Hamilton National, Chattanooga; J. D. Walker, president of the Walker System of Banks, Sparta, Ga.; Caldwell Hardy, president of the Norfolk National; and W. S. Lee, Jr., vice-president Southern Power Company, Charlotte.

FIRST TRUST BUYS STEEL BONDS

The First Trust & Savings, Chicago, has purchased $10,000,000 Jones & Laughlin Steel Company first mortgage sinking fund 5 per cent gold bonds, dated May 1, 1909 and maturing May 1, 1939. Blair & Company of New York have an interest in the purchase. The bonds are part of an authorized issue of $30,000,000, of which $25,000,000 will be outstanding when the above $10,000,000 of bonds are issued. The bonds are redeemable on or after May 1, 1914, at 105 and interest, and are secured by a first mortgage on all property of the company. The market on the bonds is 102½@103, and they probably will be brought out around those prices.

CENTRAL WEST LETTER

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

Omaha

The Kansas State Bankers Association is now larger than it has ever been in its history. Its membership reaches well over 900. In addition to its increased membership, the Kansas association has the largest fund on hand that it has ever had from which to pay rewards and to pay for the detection of crime in connection with the banks of the state. Next year will be the silver anniversary of the Kansas state association and in all likelihood it will be held in Wichita.

Quiet After Convention

The bankers of Kansas City have been resting up since the big convention. Some of them have gone out of town for a week or so and there has been little activity in financial circles. There is a distinct improvement in the feeling since the influx of so many men who were so well versed in the financial situation. Reports from all over the Central West indicate that there have been good rains over practically all of the agricultural districts. "We are simply resting" said Walton H. Holmes, president of the Pioneer Trust Company, when asked about the financial situation. "There is little to report save that everything looks extremely bright. I believe that this part of the country will revive wonderfully within the next few weeks as the crop prospects are in every way satisfactory."

Opening of New Bank

The directors of the Commonwealth National Bank which was recently organized in Kansas City have elected the following officers: G. M. Smith, president; J. E. Hutt, vice-president; L. C. Smith, Llano, Tex., cashier; E. J. Short, assistant cashier. G. M. Smith was formerly president of the Central National Bank of Kansas City and later of the National Reserve Bank. The Commonwealth will have a capital stock of $250,000 with $50,000 surplus and will open June 15th in the remodeled banking rooms at Ninth and Walnut streets. These are the directors of the new bank: G. M. Smith, J. E. Hutt, L. C. Smith, George E. Ricker, Fletcher Cowherd, W. H. Avery, W. F. Waller, W. L. Lacy, A. Munroe, Lawrence, Kan.; Charles Hoefer, Higginsville, Mo.; and J. C. Swift.

Dissapproves Bank Guaranty Law

Dan J. Riley, president of Group One Nebraska bankers, at the meeting of the group May 23d, took this shot at the Nebraska bank guaranty law: "Beyond question our people have forsaken speculation for investment. Justice White's opinion upholding the constitutionality of the bank guaranty deposit act, fetters by a legal and moral obligation my conduct of my business, but not my mind. The people of this state have begun to realize that the banker is a physician sitting at the financial pulse of the nation."

Bond buyers have made many inquiries about the issue of $250,000 for money to build a convention hall in Hutchinson, Kan.

Guarantee Assessment

Secretary Royse, of the Nebraska banking department, says that he is experiencing very little difficulty with state banks that are trying to evade the guaranty assessment. He says that only sixteen or eighteen out of a total of 667 state banks in Nebraska have made any move to get national charters. Secretary Royse has sent out letters to all of the state banks notifying them that statements for the six months ending June 1st must be sent in so that the amount of the guarantee tax levied against each bank may be computed and certified in time to make the first levy July 1st, the latter date being that set by the legislature.

Banking Notes

Since the recent convention of the Oklahoma State Bankers Association the opposition to paying the guarantee assessment has dwindled considerably. J. C. McClelland, member of the Oklahoma banking board is of the opinion that the board will have no difficulty in collecting from practically every state bank in Oklahoma with the exception of the three banks in Guthrie that have prepared to fight in the courts. More than twenty state banks that held out before the bankers convention, are now ready to pay. "Since the convening of the Oklahoma Bankers convention," said Mr. McClelland, "the state bankers have a more satisfactory feeling than before. They were made to feel that the bank guarantee law was one of permanence, and was highly successful in its operation. Heretofore the state bankers have had considerable opposition from the national bankers and naturally were made to feel that the banking law was not satisfactory."

Dr. John T. M. Johnson, president of the National Reserve Bank of Kansas City combines business and religion. While he is devoted to banking Dr. Johnson also finds time to do considerable preaching, being an ordained Baptist minister. Last week Dr. Johnson went to Wichita, Kan., to preach in the First Baptist church, Sunday morning, May 21st.

That Omaha is the rendezvous of yeggmen, was the declaration of W. B. Hughes, retiring secretary of Group One, Nebraska Bankers, which met at Lincoln last week. Mr. Hughes claimed that there were certain rooming houses

Leonard Imboden, the frenzied financier who organized a bank in Kansas City some years ago on a total capital of forty dollars, and who has just completed a term in the Colorado penitentiary for wrecking the Denver Savings Bank, has gone to New York where he says he expects to raise enough money to settle all claims against him, amounting to half a million dollars.

CONNECTICUT DESIRES DIRECT CLEARINGS IN NEW YORK

The Connecticut Bankers Association, through the executive committee, have made a proposition to the committee of the New York Clearing House that if New York will permit Connecticut checks to be accepted at par by the New York banks, the Connecticut banks will pay at par in New York exchange, upon the day of presentation, for all checks drawn upon them and sent direct by the New York banks through some clearing agency to be selected by the New York banks. In cities where there is a clearing house, checks on all the banks may be sent to the clearing house and in towns having more than one bank, all checks on banks in such towns may be sent to one bank which shall be selected to clear for all.

This proposition is being favorably received by the New York bankers as it will give them direct collection facilities and they will get New York funds for their checks in two days, whereas it takes about a week under the present method of making collections besides the cost of the one-tenth of 1 per cent collection charges.

If the clearing house committee considers this proposition favorably it will benefit the merchants and manufacturers who are now compelled to pay the regular exchange charges upon all checks received from their Connecticut customers, which charge the Connecticut bankers feel is unjust and in order to have it removed are willing to give the New York banks the benefit of a direct collection system and a par settlement in New York funds upon date of receipt as they believe the change will be in the interest of good banking and benefit not only the New York and Connecticut banks but the depositors in the banks of both states.

BIG BOOM IN NEW BANKS

A new state bank opened Wednesday morning. The Douglas State Bank at Thirty-first Street and Michigan Avenue, capital $200,000. This is the fourth bank to open on Michigan Avenue, the Railroad Exchange, which has been merged into the People's Trust and Savings, organized a year ago and occupying quarters in the Peoples Gas building, and the Michigan Avenue Trust and Savings, which opened last fall just south of Twenty-second Street.

The Douglas establishes a link between the last named and several state institutions further to the southeast. Its president was formerly cashier of the South Side State Bank. The officers and directors follow:

President—William Hardy.

Vice-President and Cashier—A. P. Uracek.

Directors—H. E. Otte, W. H. McClellan, Edward Hudson, David Rosenheim, Henry P. E. Hafer, A. P. Uracek, William Hardy.

Several other banks opened this week or will open shortly. Among them the Home Bank and Trust Company, Old Colony Trust, American State, State Bank of Lake View, Madison Street State, and South Chicago State.

During the year there have been increases in dividend rates as follows:

Austin State, 8 to 10; Central Trust, 7 to 8; Drovers Trust, 6 to 8; Kenwood Trust, 6 to 7; Lake View Trust, 5 to 6; Merchants' Loan and Trust, 12 to 16; National Produce, 4 to 6; North Avenue, 6 to 7; Northwest State, 4 to 5; State Bank of Evanston, 8 to 12.

New banks organized during the year and now doing business include the Standard Trust and Savings, People's Trust, Midcity Trust, Michigan Avenue Trust, and the LaSalle Street National Bank.

A new state bank is being organized at Stockdale, Kan., with a capital of $10,000.

Editorial Comment

THE PRESIDENT ON BANKING

In refusing pardons to a number of bankers, now doing penal service in United States prisons, President Taft singled out the case of John R. Walsh to write a key-note opinion hereafter to govern in all similar cases. Scarcely a state but has petitions on file to have one of its former distinguished residents restored to freedom and to citizenship. The chief executive in the course of his opinion gave out some mighty wholesome comment on the "insidious and dangerous moral turpitude" which the national banking laws were "specially enacted to punish."

The Walsh petition is voluminous and Mr. Taft believes the signers are blinded by sympathy to the importance of punishing such breaches of trust. Some of the Taft doctrine is worthy of preservation where it will come before the able bankers of the country. He says:

A bank officer who uses its funds to promote enterprises in which he has a private interest without the knowledge and consent of the shareholders * * * is guilty of a fraudulent breach of trust, is guilty of moral turpitude and must be punished.

No reference to usual business methods, no suggestion of great business enterprises, no excuse of building up useful industries and no subsequent attempt to make good the losses his acts have brought upon innocent persons who trusted him can gloss over the fact that such a man is taking other people's money for his own use.

Such breaches (of trust) sometimes escape punishment because the misuse of the funds result in a profit. In such cases the dishonest bank officer takes the profits * * * and no one is the wiser. * * * Then the officer comes to regard himself as a shrewd manipulator within legitimate business lines. The truth is that in the mad rush for wealth within the last few decades the lines between profit from legitimate business and gain from undue use of trust control over other people's money has been dimmed.

The opportunity to commit such crimes is only afforded to men who have enjoyed a high position in society and have secured the trust and friendship of many. Every case of this kind must present some such consideration and if an executive should yield to them it would defeat the object of the law and present a demoralizing difference between the punishment meted out to the ordinary criminal * * * and one whose position in life should have made for him the strongest restraint against any violation of the law.

Like bank inspection, a careful perusal of the president's words can do no honest banker any harm. They may prove helpful in certain other cases. The peculiarities of the text show that inner circles at the White House are wise to the tempting features of the banking business which the big clearing house of the country have set themselves the task of abolishing absolutely, if possible. The use of other people's money for private gain is the real kernel in the private banker's nut. The latest case of private bank failure in Chicago, this week, shows it, as it has been shown innumerable times. Without universal bank supervision and inspection of the ablest kind such practices as Mr. Taft complains of must continue.

I WAS THE BANK

Last week only we chronicled the collapse of a Chicago private bank where something like eighty thousand dollars of the depositors' money had disappeared in the private business and real estate ventures of the bank's proprietor. It now is rumored that the pass books themselves were trifled with so that depositors' balances were manipulated. But all this is because Illinois has no law putting even savings banks under the protection of state supervision and inspection.

This real estate speculator who financed his building and loan transactions by operating as a bank gave the following excuse for his trouble when summoned to the state's attorney's office.

"I am not an expert bookkeeper," he said. "I am a real estate broker. But to my mind my account with the bank could not have been overdrawn. I was the bank. And I am solvent."

This of course does not pay the depositors. The individual held himself out to the public as a corporation which he was not. He accepted deposits while insolvent and yet his punishment is quite uncertain after the long trail of court decisions and interpretations put upon the law by the attorneys-general of the state. "I was the bank" is the naked truth. There was no real bank, no capital, no corporation, no carefully kept and inspected books, no vigilant board of directors. McCarthy was the bank and there was no hindrance from the state. No license, no inspection, no safeguards of law. The place was called a bank, had been made to look like a bank and the public was swindled. It is too bad such things can happen in the great state of Illinois. Those who have lobbied for twenty years to prevent all kinds of bank legislation lest the privates be put out of business, are guilty of inflicting thousands of losses upon depositors. The string of failed private banks in Illinois in twenty years must be ten yards long at least.

DEATH OF JOHN V. CLARKE

One of Chicago's most respected and influential bankers, President John V. Clarke, of the Hibernian Banking Association, died early Wednesday morning from acute pneumonia. His illness was quite brief and was not regarded as serious. Mr. Clarke has headed his institution ever since his father's death, and was a director of the Chicago clearing house. His position in the community will be hard to fill. In charity and reform work he always was a leader. Condolences were sent from every bank in Chicago.

NATIONAL CONTROL IN BANKING

The principal nations and many of the states are moving toward banking control. It will not be many years, predict those who have been viewing the conditions, until branches of banks owned in other countries will be compelled to take out local charters. New York state has a bill up for passage now, at Albany, which will compel most of the foreign banks to take out state or national charters. European nations, and many South American countries, do not object to German, English or American banks being opened but it must be done under local charter and control. In Italy banking can be done only under an Italian charter. London still is "open" territory and has banks of all nations. American capitalists establishing banks in South America will confront this condition in most places. Formerly English banks in nearly all countries had the note issuing power. This is being curtailed. New York state seems to be taking the lead in placing restrictions upon foreign banking and may have good reasons for it.

CHICAGO CLEARINGS SHOW GAINS

Clearings in Chicago for May showed gains over May of last year. So far it is the first month of 1911 that has. The total of the checks exchanged during the month was $1,194,000,000, a gain of $38,955,000 over the total in May, 1910. The decreases in the clearings of the former months this year ranged from $14,528,000 in January to $107,580,000 in April. The change from a decrease of more than $107,000,000 in the clearings in April to an increase of $38,955,000 in May indicates considerable growth in the activity of the banks.

In the first five months of this year the clearings of Chicago banks reached a total of $5,722,000,000, as compared with $5,948,000,000 in the corresponding period last year. The decrease figures about 3.78 per cent.

The Exchange Bank of Belleflower, McLean county, Ill., will erect a new bank building this season.

Farm Mortgage Conditions

Valuable paper read before the Charleston, Illinois, group meeting by F. W. Thompson, the farm loan expert of the Merchants Loan and Trust, Chicago

The great need in the farm mortgage business is to broaden its market and popularity, both for primary producers such as country banks and firms situated within a short distance of the farms offered as security for loans and also for the distributors.

Up to the present time the mortgages so arising have found their way to the great life insurance companies of the United States who buy them for their unquestioned safety and comparative higher rate than that afforded by other standard securities. When a farm mortgage is lodged into the strong box of the life insurance company it is safely tucked away from further public use, and its utility ends after serving the purpose of the corporation owning same. The delay occasioned through the purchase or making of a farm loan in this manner is oftentimes exasperating and is usually brought about by irregularities of title which require patience and often much time and ability to patch. At that a vast amount of funds have been furnished for the farm mortgage loan being attested by the $500,000,000 now in force in the coffers of the life insurance companies and safely another $200,000,000 can be added by the holdings of savings banks, trust companies, and other corporations in the United States. By far the greatest handicap in converting farm mortgages is that which is occasioned by the country banker in attempting to dispose of good, sound mortgages which he may acquire in times of plethoric reserves. It is the purpose of this article to endeavor, by suggestion, to offer some means of help and reasons for the failure of the buying public, to purchase more freely of the offerings made by country bankers in our best agricultural districts.

The country banker is handicapped by the sphere of his environment. He is little known outside of, say, a county. The same can be said of the security he has to offer to the public at large. To be sure he has the advantage of his own local market, but the question of taxation of money and credits limits his market from local sources and competition arising from the capital of his own depositors oftentimes takes away the profit from the loan and thereby the incentive to make the loan.

Again the value of the security and the genuineness of the signature is largely a matter of faith on the part of the buyer of the mortgage, and men and corporations of large means are usually of the "show me" kind who require cold, undisputed facts as the basis of their security. The facts surrounding farm mortgages are just as sound (and more so, in my opinion) as those governing any security enjoying a broader market, but the efforts put forth to make people generally believe them have been weak and abortive as compared with railroad and other securities, for instance.

Then again the heterogeneous forms of blanks used by country bankers, with no general uniformity, making places of payment in every village and hamlet in the United States, does not attract the money of large centers of population. This condition might be satisfactory for local purchasers, but people generally prefer loans payable in New York or Chicago at some large, responsible bank or trust company where endorsements on account of optional payments and for interest payments can be made without sending the principal note and mortgage away for such a purpose.

Again the question of title to the property offered as security acts as a serious bar to the general purchase of farm mortgage securities lodged in the hands of country bankers. Too often have loans been made on the strength of adverse possession and the statute of limitation rather than on the strength of a good, merchantable record title.

What then is the remedy for this condition, and what should be done to make for the country banker (and incidentally for the good farmer) a broader market for a security which is instinctively felt by all to be the best the country affords, when properly surrounded by reliable information and legal title. My first remedy is to suggest the organization of a company sufficiently capitalized, say, by the representative stockholders, directors or officers of a combination of banking houses in one of the principal cities, whose contributing territory is largely agricultural. If it were not for the almost hopeless task of procuring the necessary political help to obtain a charter issued by the federal government, by which charter the federal government would assume jurisdiction over and supervision of such a company, I would suggest as the best means a specially chartered mortgage bank. For the present that is impracticable, and for present needs I would suggest that the company be a private corporation organized by representative men whose names and character would be a guaranty to the general public of the rightful management and conduct of such a company. This company could establish branches throughout the best agricultural portions of the United States in the largest cities of such districts, through which branches the company could come in almost direct touch with the borrower. This company should include among its functions the right to issue bonds against farm mortgages deposited with a corporation duly organized by law to accept trusteeships, said trustee corporation to be located in any of the principal reserve cities in the United States, the place of payment of the bond governing the city in which such trustee corporation shall be located.

The details with reference to substitution of mortgage loans for those paid or otherwise retired and the requirements of the parent company of the trustee in accepting mortgages in trust, should be made public knowledge. In the infancy of trusteeship as exercised by a corporation, a great many abuses crept into the debenture system which oftentimes proved a weakness and many times hastened the downfall of the company issuing its debenture bonds. Along with the general development in most business lines, the question of trusteeship as exercised by a corporation has had its proportionate share, and at the present time the care and requirements of the large, well managed companies handling trusteeships are of such a nature and their capital is of such a proportion and their standing in the business world of such moment, that a trusteeship, under present conditions, need not cause the concern nor fear that it formerly occasioned, and with a knowledge of the requirements of the debenture company with respect to its purchases of mortgages, the responsible trust company would be held accountable for any breach of trust occasioned by accepting securities inferior and not up to the standard required by the trust agreement.

The company should be denied the privilege of selling individual mortgages and it should be required to give the public frequent published statements of its condition and of the character of the mortgages behind the series of bonds issued.

A most rigid supervision should be exercised and in turn the corporation so organized should have rigid rules and requirements in its purchases of loans. In short, its reputation should be just as jealously guarded by safe, sane and competent directorship, as is now the practice in most of our well established banking concerns.

An encouragement of prepayments before maturity should be fostered and urged. These payments and an adequate money reserve would provide means, with which to take care of bonds of the company offered in a general way through exchanges, thereby making a fairly stable price for such bonds. Through companies of this kind a market would be afforded to country bankers for loans measuring up to the standard of the purchasing company. This standard and the territory from which the loans arise, securing a given series of bonds would govern the net return to the investor.

Natural competition between sections would tend to keep the interest rate at its proper point. Efficiency of management and volume of business would earn, in its relative proportion, good, fair, or bad returns for the stockholders of such an institution.

Such a remedy as is here proposed is not easy of accomplishment and possibly offers no immediate relief to the country banker. For such relief, I would suggest the organization of an appraisal board by the associated bankers of a given county, its duties being to appraise from time to time each forty acre tract in the county and, as nearly as possible, ascertain the crop and other returns from the various farm units in the county. This organization should be equipped to furnish accurate plats of each farm unit, showing accurately the ground in cultivation, grass and timber, and the number of acres suitable for cultivation and how thoroughly the farm is tile drained. The judgment of this central organization as to the value of the premises and also the owner's name should be incorporated in any report made. The expense of the organization should be borne by the associated banks and a reasonable charge made for information given to investors should reimburse the banks for the expense of maintaining such an organization. It is needless for me to say that men employed in the central organization should be men of high standing in the community and their judgment unquestioned.

This organization should be charged with publicly making known the attractiveness of the county in which it is found, and from time to time judiciously advertise the farming

GROUP SIX, INDIANA BANKERS

Connorsville, Ind., May 26.—Group Six, composed of Indiana bankers, held a fine meeting here to-day, the attendance and the interest being remarkable. The meeting was called to order by Chairman Dan S. Perry, at 10 A. M. in the Opera House. The welcome address on behalf of the city of Connorsville was made by Mayor John S. Hankins. The address of welcome on behalf of the Connorsville bankers was given by Geo C. Florea, president of the First National. Response was by Thos. B. Millikan, cashier, of the Citizens State, Newcastle. After an address by Chairman Perry a short talk on "Progressive Banking" was given by Andrew Smith, secretary Indiana Bankers Association. The meeting adjourned to take an automobile trip of inspection of the local industries of the city. At 12:30 about 200 bankers were served luncheon in the Commercial Club rooms. The meeting reconvened at 1:30. The National Reserve Association was very ably discussed by John Perrin of the Fletcher-American National, Indianapolis. Mr. Perrin set out the plan in a very clear, concise manner. A resolution was adopted by the group meeting favoring the plan. The secretary of the group was requested to forward copies of the resolution to each of the Indiana congressmen and senators. Hugh Theo. Miller, vice-president of Irwin's Bank, Columbus, gave a very interesting address on "Vocational Training in the Public Schools." Another most interesting address was given by Ernest B. Thomas, secretary, Peoples Loan & Trust Company, Rushville, on "Trust Companies." The last address of the afternoon was made by Col. L. P. Newby, president Citizens National, Knightstown. Col Newby's address was on "The Importance of Trust Companies and Savings Banks to the Community." The address was scholarly, forceful and convincing, at the close of which Col. Newby received many congratulations.

The following officers were unanimously elected for the ensuing year:

Chairman, Lucian Harris, Rising Sun; Secretary, R. A. Hicks, Cambridge City; executive committee, Dan S. Perry, Greensburg, J. N. Perkins, Rising Sun, C. D. Johnson, Liberty B. F. Thiebaud, Connorsville, J. W. Tevis, Madison.

Fred I. Barrows, cashier Central State Bank, Connorsville, was named for the nominating committee of the state association.

ANDREW SMITH, Secretary.

TOLONO BANKER HAS MANY ACTIVITIES

In many small towns the banker is "interested" in many enterprises outside of the bank. While there may be a certain amount of hazard in this custom yet there are many Illinois bankers who are conducting safe and conservative business enterprises in addition to their counting-room work. A. B. Campbell, cashier of the Citizens Banks of Tolono, is one village banker who can lay claim to the title of being "busy." Besides his banking work Mr. Campbell is postmaster, is editor of the Tolono Weekly Herald, and is engaged in the insurance and loan business. As his various activities are conservative there is no doubt that Mr. Campbell is faring well in his village life.

Chapter Election

Tuesday night of last week was election night at the big Chicago Chapter, A. I. B. Harry S. Smale of the Continental and Commercial won out over Alison of the Northern Trust and Rich of the Illinois Trust for president. Walter L. Johnson of the Republic defeated Damon of the Union Trust. T. J. Nugent of the First National had no opposition for corresponding secretary and John H. Greer of the Merchants none for treasurer. Members of the executive committee and 27 delegates to the national convention were chosen.

DALLAS CHAPTER MEETING

The Dallas, Tex., branch of the American Institute of Banking opened its new club rooms in the First National Bank building May 18th with an opening meeting. The program was:

Address by Forest Mathis, president.

Music.

Address by W. M. Pierson.

Debate: "Resolved, That the Interchange of Credit Information between the Banks of Dallas would be Advantageous to the Banks." Affirmative: Stewart Beckley and J. D. Gillespie. Negative: A. S. Tucker and William G. O'Connell. Refreshments were served.

Not Deterred by Warm Weather

Summer heat will not deter the Dallas, Tex., Chapter of the American Institute of Banking, from holding meetings through June, July and August. Speaking of the work now outlined one of the officers of the chapter said last week: "The Dallas chapter has arranged a program for the summer months which promise to hold the attention of the entire chapter throughout the whole vacation period. The object of the officials of the chapter is not only to develop the social features of the club, but to educate the members along the lines of sound banking."

MILWAUKEE JUNIOR BANK OFFICERS ORGANIZE

The Milwaukee Junior Bank Officers' Association, which has existed informally for the past two years among employees of various Milwaukee banks, was permanently organized at a recent meeting held in the Hotel Pfister. Officers were elected as follows: President, R. L. Stone, assistant cashier German-American Bank; vice-president, Oscar Kasten, assistant cashier First National Bank; secretary-treasurer, Carl Engelke, assistant cashier Germania National Bank. The association was organized for the purpose of promoting good fellowship among the younger officials of the banks, and also for the purpose of co-operating with a view to increasing their efficiency.

Discussions of questions of the day, also any questions affecting the banking business, will be freely entered into and the meetings are to be made as instructive and entertaining along these lines as possible.

The banks of Sioux City have voted to close at 1 P. M. Saturday afternoon until September 30th.

PITTSBURGH CHAPTER ELECTION

Pittsburgh boasts one of the largest and most progressive chapters in the American Institute of Banking. Its annual elections arouse more interest and excitement than any other political event in the city, and the annual meeting which took place this week was no exception. Following was the successful ticket: President, H. E. Hebrank, Union National Bank; vice-president, A. W. Schreiber, Carnegie National Bank; secretary, B. O. Hill, Second National Bank; treasurer, A. P. Martin, Terminal Trust Company; directors, J. Howard Arthur, People's National Bank; G. P. Richards, Commercial National Bank; W. J. Heyneman, East End Savings and Trust Company, P. L. Adams, Farmers' Deposit National Bank; J. A. Price, Iron and Glass Dollar Savings Bank; H. I. Thompson, Columbia National Bank.

The Mobile Chapter of the American Institute of Banking has elected W. J. Parham, president; P. G. Barnes, vice-president; W. O. Jarvis, secretary, and E. S. McConnell, treasurer.

CHOSEN PRESIDENT OF PITTSBURGH BANK

The directors of the First National Bank of Pittsburgh have elected Oscar L. Telling to be president, succeeding James S. Kuhn, who becomes chairman of the board. Mr. Telling has been in the office of the comptroller of the currency at Washington for four years, latterly as chief of the division of reports and examiner at large. He comes highly recommended by Comptroller of the Currency Murray, who suggested his selection when he found he could not himself accept the position. Mr. Telling was born in Cleveland, Ohio, later being taken to Colorado, where he graduated from the University of Colorado. He has been in various branches of the government since 1899. He will enter actively upon his duties as president of the First National as soon as he can settle up his affairs at Washington.

MEETING OHIO BANKERS PROGRAM COMMITTEE

A meeting of the program committee of the Ohio Bankers Association will be held soon in the headquarters in the Wyandotte building to take up the work of completing the program for the annual convention, which will be held at the Hotel Breakers, Cedar Point, July 5th and 6th.

President Reynolds, of the Continental and Commercial National Bank of Chicago, and Chairman Vreeland, of the committee on banking and currency in the last national house, have accepted invitations, and, with a banker from Pittsburgh, will be the speakers from outside the state. There will be at least three well-known bankers on the program, and it is probable that some leading banker of the state will be placed on the program to speak in relation to collateral loans, which is yearly growing a more important factor in Ohio banking.

strength of the county in the daily papers of our large centers of population, thereby giving investors a chance of familiarizing themselves with the given county's farm values and crop returns.

Care should be taken to tell nothing but the plain, unvarnished truth, which could be verified from other sources, thereby giving the organization a standing which it otherwise would not have.

By this means, each farmer needing money ought to get just what he is entitled to and no more. If he is a poor farmer, with the knowledge that his credit and rate will be commensurate with his methods, is it not fair to suppose he will at least make an effort to compete with his more careful neighbors in producing better crops, thereby necessitating the improvement of his farm?

In the last analysis, the farms would be known as Classes A, B, C, D, etc., and farmers would be classified in the same manner. Competition among investors would soon reduce Class A, and relatively the other classes, to such numbers as to entitle these farms to the lowest rate of interest current and also to the highest amount loanable.

There would also be Class A farmers on Class D land, a combination which would be adjusted eventually by investors, who would give due consideration to the mortality of the Class A farmers and the possibility of the Class D farm falling into the hands of a Class A, B, C or D farmer. In other words, with the information furnished by the central organization (and I am assuming this information to be reliable) rightful adjustments of rate and amount loaned would follow.

Now another prime feature absolutely necessary to the convertibility of a farm mortgage is the genuineness of the signature to the principal note, coupons and mortgage securing same; that is, an investor should not have to even burden his mind with doubt that the signatures are those of the bona fide owner of the farm offered as security. With each loan, there should be furnished a guaranty of the bank negotiating same, or a certificate should be furnished by the county association or some sufficiently capitalized concern, attesting to the genuineness of the signatures. In considering the efficiency of the guaranty of the association or corporation making same, I would suggest that the articles of incorporation provide for sufficient capital to make its guaranty effective in case of forgery. The mortgage papers should all contain a certificate of their genuineness, so conspicuously printed and signed as to allay any question of the validity of the papers forming the mortgage loan.

Another feature which needs great improvement over present conditions is the question of suitable blanks for the purpose of presenting a uniform, durable, and satisfactorily drawn set of papers. One of the main present objections to farm mortgages is the non-uniformity of mortgage papers coming from the various bankers in various localities in each state. At present the taste of each banker is exemplified in the blanks he uses. He invariably requires the payment of funds in his own little town and his particular office, for reasons some of which are good but most of which are selfish, which acts as a bar to many sales by reason of the constant shifting of papers for endorsement of partial payments, and also contributes to the distrust of some investors as to the proper application of payments made at places of payment without notice to a foreign holder of the paper.

Then again, the method in vogue at present, in a great many cases, does not concern itself with alterations and corrections made, because when the papers are drawn and signed, very little thought is given to the silent third party who is to have the opportunity of buying the completed loan, and frequently, to my own knowledge, mortgage papers contain so many alterations and changes as to present the appearance of hen scratches. How do third parties know when the alterations were made? And yet they are charged with knowledge and are forewarned against fraudulent alterations, and would have no defense, if fraud were proven. It is no cause for wonder that such papers find a limited number of purchasers. The wonder is that they are purchased at all.

Last, but by far not the least, the question of title should have some treatment which will relieve the borrower from the necessity of constantly recurring expense every time his abstract is examined, and also be relieved of the exasperating delays attendant upon the meeting of objections of counsel to title. My experience has been that at least 50 per cent of the trouble could be eliminated by having the abstract show the record and not some abstractor's view of the record.

I realize that abstractors are not entirely to blame for this condition of affairs, often being held down by a maximum limit which a farmer or land owner arbitrarily fixes as the value of an abstract and above which he will not pay. A land owner never really appreciates what a complete abstract is worth, until the records of the county in which his land is located are suddenly destroyed by fire or otherwise. It is an act of prudence to have a complete abstract of the record title to one's property. No abstract should be accepted, under my plan for the broadening of the market for farm mortgages, which does not come certified by a corporation of ample capital, accompanied by a bond of at least the amount of the loan, the bond to be given by a responsible surety company not in any way connected with the abstract company, attesting to the genuineness of the matter abstracted and that the abstract as furnished contains and covers all matters and instruments of record affecting the title to a given piece of property.

Very naturally follows the question of the validity of the mortgagor's title to the property offered as security for his loan, even after furnishing a complete record title. It has been my experience that no two examiners of title will agree upon essentials that go to make up a merchantable title. A local examiner is perhaps unconsciously influenced by local knowledge and his judgment of a merchantable title is colored by the knowledge of transactions between people interested in a given title, which is not a matter of record. Then, some examiners of title are not seriously concerned in examining a title for "only a loan," and feel that if they do not overlook an unreleased lien or a tax matter unpaid, they have done their full duty, relying on the bar of adverse possession to cover all the rest of the faults of title.

That the title is the bugbear of the mortgage business, no one will attempt to deny. What is the remedy?

Only two courses are open to eradicate title troubles. First, is the Torrence system; and second, the guaranty of title by a large, well known, efficiently managed, title guaranty corporation, of sufficient capital as to command confidence in its certificate of title.

Eventually, the first named plan would be my choice, but for the present the latter plan. Under the old plan, an investor buying a mortgage from a comparatively small bank with small capital would of necessity be forced to have a title examined by his counsel, and, in addition to the expense of this operation, the delay in making the examination and complying with the requirements of examining counsel has often discouraged the country banker from going farther with the business of negotiating farm mortgages. On the other hand, with a complete abstract before it, a guaranty company will govern its charge for a certificate commensurate with the risk it takes of protecting the purchaser of the mortgage loan from defects of title. The purchaser of a loan, accompanied by a certificate of title, is not bothered with the details of title and feels a confidence in the certificate which we would not feel relying on title alone. I am assuming that the company guaranteeing the title in the mortgage is not only amply capitalized but also bears the reputation of being a careful examiner of titles, and whose standards of title are of such a character as to give the greatest amount of confidence in its certificate.

Given these standards and the moral support of local bankers to maintain a high quality of security, I can come to no other conclusion than to predict an increasing market for one of the best securities known to men—the first mortgage on good, productive farm land, wherever situated.

FOREIGN CROP PROMISES FAIR

Washington, May 31.—Crop prospects in most foreign countries are fairly satisfactory. The department of agriculture so describes the situation. Partial failure of the corn crop in Argentina and Uruguay and the backward season in almost all Europe are the only untoward conditions.

A bumper crop of wheat may be had in Argentina if the season proves good. The acreage planted is probably the greatest in that country's history. The same is true of its acreage in flaxseed and oats. Argentina's corn crop, however, shows the smallest yield for years. Uruguay's small crop is a failure. Winter wheat seeding in Australia has been so interrupted by rain as greatly to decrease the area sown. Heavy yields of wheat and oil seeds in British India are indicated.

Spring wheat in Canada gives excellent promise. The seed was in the soil on May 1st, over probably 80 per cent of the land to be sown.

Central Europe shows but fair conditions. Winter wheat is rated average in Germany, but rye is under average. Austria and Hungary report unsatisfactory conditions. Russia on the whole has fared well with its cereals. They wintered well except in some parts of the South, where extensive replowings were necessary.

S. B. Smith has been elected assistant cashier of the First National of Campton, Cal.

Chicago for National Reserve Association Plan

Chicago has gone flatly upon record as favoring the National Reserve Association plan of monetary reform. Eliminating bankers as such, and politicians, and believing that the faults of the present monetary system of the United States can be corrected, and that the present system of banking should be changed with the idea of preventing the possibility of unnatural money shortages in times of panic, the Chicago Association of Commerce on Monday organized against the present system by forming the National Citizens' League.

The purpose of the league is to conduct the widest possible campaign of education with a view toward organizing in every state and territory a broad, non-political movement that will demand federal legislation for currency reform. The league is to spend its every effort for the promotion of a sound banking system.

John V. Farwell has been elected director of the league and Professor J. Laurence Laughlin, of the University of Chicago, is chairman of the executive committee. The personnel of the board of directors, as named in a resolution adopted at a joint meeting of the board of directors and the executive committee of the Association of Commerce at the Hotel LaSalle, follows:

JOHN G. SHEDD, president Marshall Field & Company.

MARVIN HUGHITT, chairman of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad board of directors.

GRAHAM TAYLOR, Chicago Commons.

HARRY A. WHEELER, president the Chicago Association of Commerce.

B. E. SUNNY, president Chicago Telephone Company.

CYRUS H. McCORMICK, president International Harvester Company.

JULIUS ROSENWALD, president Sears, Roebuck & Company.

CHARLES H. WACKER, president United Charities.

FREDERIC A. DELANO, president Wabash Railroad.

JOHN BARTON PAYNE, president South Park Commission.

A. C. BARTLETT, president Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Company.

A. A. SPRAGUE, president Sprague, Warner & Company.

J. LAURENCE LAUGHLIN, head of department of political economy, University of Chicago.

JOHN V. FARWELL, president J. V. Farwell Company.

CLYDE M. CARR, president Joseph T. Ryerson & Son.

Chicago is to be the headquarters of the National Citizens' League, and while well-known Chicago business men constitute the original board of directors who will organize and direct it, the complete organization will include a member from each state and territory.

In creating the National Citizens' League, the Chicago Association of Commerce has put in motion an enterprise that had its inception in a meeting of representatives of leading commercial organizations of the country in Washington, D. C., two years ago, called by the National Board of Trade.

Growing out of that meeting a movement took form in a number of cities for a wide campaign of education to carry home to the people the urgent need for radical currency reform. Chicago was selected as the city from which the national enterprise should emanate.

Incorporation papers will be forwarded to Springfield as soon as the legal forms can be drafted. The first meeting of the directors of the league was held Friday. The movement is intended to appeal to all classes and to all sections, and will be non-partisan.

As soon as the state and territorial organizations are formed it is expected several million people will join. Membership in the league will cost $1, which amount will go into a fund to defray the expenses of the campaign.

ANOTHER PRIVATE FAILS—ONE INDICTED

Ernest Edman, private banker at Irondale, is reported missing. A bankruptcy petition has been filed in the federal courts. Losses of entire savings threaten hundreds of Polish and laboring people. Edman held out promises of 4 per cent on savings. Warrants are out for his arrest.

Cashier Alfred Robyne of the P. F. McCarthy private bank, which closed last week, Thirty-ninth and State streets, has been indicted. Technically it was for selling duplicate "first" mortgages to depositors. The shortage in spite of these methods is placed at $85,000.

IS ENTITLED TO KICK

The Gretna (La.) Exchange & Savings Bank complained May 16th that after a week's existence as a corporation, no one had solicited its account. Will open to the public July 1st. C. F. Goelbke is president and C. A. Frick cashier. Gretna is suburban to New Orleans.

The Fort Sutter National Bank at Sacramento has chosen the Western Metropolis Bank, of San Francisco, to be its reserve agent.

Northwest Letter

Banking news from Minneapolis—St. Paul financial center, and surrounding States, compiled by J. Edwards Smith

In St. Paul the financial situation is outlined by a financial daily paper editor thus:

Although the next call of the comptroller will show a falling off of deposits in St. Paul banks of several million dollars under last year there is no feeling of depression either in banking or commercial circles. It is just the reverse. The bankers know that local jobbers are carrying the retailers of the Northwest in many instances, not only for the goods they bought last year but for the stocks for this fall and there is no money coming to the banks from that source. The jobbers in some cases are getting money in the East to finance their operations with retailers.

The increase in deposits in local savings banks and in savings banks generally over the Northwest, contrary to the reports from the commercial banks, shows healthy growth. In fact the increase in deposits for four months of this year compared with a year ago is at the same rate. In May there was a slight dropping off, due possibly to the fact that taxes are paid that month.

The steady growth of the savings accounts shows, however, that the business of the city is on a stable basis. There is no tendency to spend money needlessly. On the contrary, clerks and factory hands are conserving capital.

Bankers are generally optimistic over the crop outlook, regarding it as much better than a year ago, and some refuse to entertain a fear that anything can come to prevent a big crop now.

Bumper Crop Predicted

Returning from northeastern North Dakota John B. Tucker, president of the Minnehaha State Bank, says of the crop: "I am thoroughly convinced that statements of the farmers and bankers there and that part of Minnesota between Minneapolis and North Dakota are well founded. They say that if conditions such as they have been having will just continue with the proper moderation toward the end there will not only be a full crop, but a bumper crop.

"Of course it is too early to count unhatched chickens, but the indications point to a wonderful yield for the coming harvest. There is plenty of moisture. Ducks are plentiful where last year they would not stay because they could not get enough water to wet their feet."

With E. W. Decker, vice-president of the Northwestern National, the week has not been rosy. Compelled to remain home for recovery from an operation he discovered the house on fire and the Rocky Mountain goat he shot several seasons back in danger of being singed. The loss is $3,000.

Perry Harrison, shaved as to his moustache after many years of its cultivation, has been reintroducing himself at the Security National, and is now able to get checks cashed and attend the meetings of the various committees. He is a changed man, in appearance.

James A. Tawney, former member of congress, is to be the principal speaker at the meeting of the first district Minnesota bankers, June 5th and 6th, at Winona. One hundred bankers are expected. The Winona bankers entertain. C. B. Hazelton, assistant secretary of the Union Trust Company of Chicago, is the outside speaker. He will talk on "Bank Advertising." J. L. Mitchell of Austin will lead the round table discussion.

The existence of the First National of Kalispell, Mont., has been extended until May 23d, 1931. The First State of Marble, Minn., has been converted to the First National.

Banking Notes

The Security Trust Company of St. Paul has bought $270,000 Beltrami county drainage bonds and the First National and Northern National banks of Bemidji have taken $60,000.

John Mathews of the First State, Bowdle, N. D., says "Conditions could have not been better in and around Bowdle. It is so all over the state with a good outlook even in the northerly and westerly portions."

Contracts have been let for remodeling the New York Life building in Minneapolis belonging to the First National interests. The changes will cost $100,000.

Two new state banks in Minnesota are the Farmers' & Merchants' of Marietta, $15,000 capital, J. C. Draper and other incorporators; State of Virginia, capital $50,000, F. H. Wellcome of Minneapolis and others incorporators.

The organization of the Kenyon State, Minn., was completed recently by seventy-five farmers, and business men, with $25,000 capital. Directors are Andrew Finstuen, S. A. Bullis, S. G. Nolan, G. A. Flom, P. L. Berg, B. C. Fogelson, J. R. Kylo, George Strandemo and A. B. Lee. Mr. Flom is cashier.

Another very important holding of local bank stocks is that of Edward Morris, whose principal interest is in the First National. The value of the Morris bank stock probably is close to the most valuable of the other single interests in the city.

James A. Patten has bought liberally of the stocks of local banking institutions and has become an important holder. Other prominent interests in the banks are the McCormick holdings in the Merchants' Loan and Trust, the Blair family interest in the Corn Exchange, and the holdings of E. H. Gary of the United States Steel Corporation in several local institutions.

The first publication of the list of stockholders of the LaSalle Street National credits Senator Lorimer with 1,010 shares and C. B. Munday, the vice-president, with 1,496 shares.

Contractor J. T. Colleton has placed a vault 10x12 feet in the new building of the state bank at Industry, Ill. The institution is a new enterprise with a capital stock of $10,000. Mr. mann Schulz of the Industry community has been elected cashier. This makes seven banking institutions for Austin county.

HAMILTON NATIONAL, CHATTANOOGA

June first the Hamilton National, of Chattanooga opened with a capital of one million, and a surplus of half a million, and as sole owners of the new Hamilton National building. Thus Chattanooga's first million dollar bank is the Hamilton National. At a recent meeting of the stockholders, at which there was practically a full representation, action was taken to increase the capital stock to $1,000,000, this big change was made effective June 1st. The surplus and profit has been increased to $500,000, making the total capital and surplus of the bank $1,500,000. The fine institution of which T. R. Preston is president therefore becomes the premier national bank in point of capital in East Tennessee, and with one exception, the largest in the state of Tennessee. Growth of Tennessee's banking power has attracted outside attention already, and the big growth of the Hamilton will justify all predictions. T. R. Preston is being congratulated from banks in all parts of the union.

PEOPLES DEPOSIT VAULTS READY

The vaults for the safe deposit department of the Peoples Trust & Savings, in the basement of their banking quarters, Peoples Gas building, Michigan Avenue and Adams Street, will be ready for use by June 1st. John W. Gorby, manager of the safe deposit department has had valuable experience in this line of business, having been for several years past employed by the Central Trust in a clerical capacity, and when they acquired their present quarters at 125 W. Monroe Street, he entered the employ of the Chicago Safe Deposit Company.

SCHLAFLY STRIKES OIL

August Schlafly, director in the Mississippi Valley Trust Company and formerly president of the Missouri-Lincoln Trust, has struck oil on his property near Carlyle, Ill. The first well, which was shot last week, began producing at the rate of over 500 bbls. a day. During the last year numerous prospectors have been developing the new field. Schlafly has some 4,000 acres of land in the belt, and after watching developments, decided to do a little boring on his own hook, with very happy results. Mr. Schlafly owns several banks in Illinois, besides large banking interests here, and says he will still stick to financiering, in spite of having "struck oil."

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, May 31.—That Spokane's supreme confidence in itself and its unbounded faith in the future of the tributary country, which was the means of attracting eastern capital and has returned satisfactory profits to the investors, will result in the investment of still larger amounts of money, is the prediction of William J. Dutton of San Francisco, president of the Firemen's Fund Insurance Company, who was in the city a few days ago. The company, which already has important investments in the Inland Empire, contemplates placing larger sums in and near Spokane, and the primary purpose of Mr. Dutton's visit was to get into actual touch with conditions and affairs. He expressed himself as highly pleased with the activity and progress of the city and the development of the surrounding country, saying he could now easily understand why this district is held in such high esteem all over the United States. Spokane is preparing for the future, he added, and the work is well planned and carefully carried to successful conclusion.

Fruit Crop

Letters from bankers in various parts of eastern Washington to Thomas H. Brewer, president of the Fidelity National Bank of Spokane, confirm the reports sent out early in the spring regarding the fruit crop, saying that the yield will be larger than ever before. The apple crops alone will be more than 6,500 cars. Most of the districts report there will be a full crop of peaches, while others declare the pear crop will be the largest in the history of the state. The berry yield also will be more than ordinary. The loss on the whole by late frosts in Yakima county will not exceed 5 per cent.

Banking Notes

Fifty thousand dollars in bonds will soon be issued by the city of Spokane to test a day labor plan originated by David C. Coates, commissioner of public work. The bonds are to bear not more than 4½ per cent interest and will run 20 years. The issue will provide what is to be known as the "City of Spokane Local Improvement Working Fund of 1911." Commissioner Coates says the money realized from these bonds is for use only until such time as the property holders begin to pay in their assessments for improvements.

Advices received in Spokane from Boise, Idaho, say that never before in the history of the state land board have so many applications come for loans. There are applications on file now for more than $400,000. The state is limited in the amount it can loan as only the proceeds of the sales of forest lands are to be put in this class.

Union Trust and Savings Bank of Spokane is making a novel educational campaign, to explain to the public the object of a trust company. The exploitation bureau is issuing a monthly pamphlet called "The Marble Monthly," dealing with the various departments.

Fritz Miller, who was arrested at North Yakima, Wash., recently will serve an indeterminate term of from two to twenty years in the state's prison for attempting to cash a check for $7, which was raised to $70. The trial occupied only a few minutes and in less than an hour after sentence was pronounced he was on the way to Walla Walla.

J. Grier Long, president of the Washington Trust Company and member of the board of education of Spokane, has submitted a plan for the establishment of polytechnical work and a more thorough drill in the common branches in the public schools of Spokane.

Dr. George A. Moore of San Francisco, president of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, is in Spokane visiting his son, George J. Moore of the Western Union Life Insurance Company.

German Savings & Loan Society of Spokane has loaned $25,000 to the Spokane Interstate Fair Association for five years at 7 per cent.

George K. March of Pierre, S. D., a director of the National Bank of Commerce, will move to Spokane next fall.

Seattle

May 29.—J. H. Bloedel, one of the leading lumber manufacturers of the Pacific Northwest, J. W. Maxwell and A. H. Rhoades have been elected directors of the Commercial State Bank to fill vacancies caused by the resignation of Clyde C. Chittenden, J. R. McLaughlin and John McMaster. The change in the directorate of the bank is a step in the reorganization of the institution and its conversion into a national bank under the name of the National City Bank of Seattle.

Mr. Maxwell will be president. The capital stock will be raised from $200,000 to $500,000 and a surplus fund of $100,000 created. F. W. Baker, Charles H. and Frank D. Black, prominent Seattle capitalists, will be on the new board of directors. The organization will be completed by June 1st.

A new state bank has been organized at Chewelah. A charter has just been issued by State Bank Examiner J. L. Mohundro. The bank is capitalized at $15,000. George W. Seal, of Colville, is president. Other large stockholders are: Senator A. W. Anderson, Addy, and Charles Adams, Chewelah. The institution has commenced business.

J. F. Allen, a representative of the Seaboard National Bank, of New York, spent several days in Seattle looking into prospective investments. Mr. Allen has been the guest of J. E. Chilberg, vice-president of the Scandinavian-American Bank.

The Dexter Horton National Bank of Seattle has opened a bond department for the sale to investors of home securities. Interest in stocks and securities is steadily increasing in Seattle and the Northwest and the bank purposes to increase the facilities enjoyed in Seattle for such investment.

MICHIGAN BANK CHANGES NAME AND INCREASES CAPITAL

The Peninsular Savings Bank of Detroit, Mich., organized in 1887, with an authorized capital of $500,000, has voted to increase its capital to $800,000, and to change its name from the Peninsular Savings Bank of Detroit, to that of "Peninsular State Bank." The increase of capital is to be brought about through the declaration of a 20 per cent dividend, and the new issue of stock to be distributed among stockholders of record at the ratio of 160 pro rata, according to their present holdings and sufficient to bring the capitalization up to the required amount. Should there be any stock of the new issue not subscribed for by stockholders, it is to be offered in the open market at 170.

According to last published report, the bank had deposits aggregating $8,182,675; surplus, and undivided profits, $299,934, and declared its usual 2 per cent quarterly dividend. John H. Johnson is president.

Los Angeles

Russell J. Waters, president of the Citizens National Bank, who has been ill, is considerably improved.

Luke Wood has been appointed assistant cashier of the Equitable Savings Bank. He was for eight years a teller of the German-American Savings Bank, and more recently was connected with the City Tax Department.

Walter Walker, a teller of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, has been promoted to be an assistant cashier of that institution, with which he has been connected a number of years.

A number of Los Angeles bankers are now engaged in the process of forming an entirely new trust company, to be capitalized at $1,000,000. They expect to have the company ready for business upon the completion of a ten-story office building to cost approximately $500,000, to be erected on the northwest corner of Ninth and Main streets.

Mayor Conrad, of San Diego, refused to sign the ordinance authorizing the council to dispose of the remaining $750,000 worth of park improvement bonds, as there is no necessity of selling them until the money is actually needed.

Los Angeles bankers hail with delight the news that Governor Johnson has signed the bill providing for ninety-nine year leases. This is of immense importance to the future building industry in this and other cities in the state. The effect of this law will be to encourage the investment here of money by the large financial institutions of the East, many of which were chary of investing here under short-term leases.

Earl Smith, cashier of the State Bank of Turon, Kan., has resigned.

Wm. F. Fox has been appointed assistant cashier of the Union National Bank of Indianapolis. No assistant cashier has been appointed to take his place.

J. F. Kreidler has been elected president in place of Walter Vail, deceased; W. W. Vail has been appointed cashier in place of J. F. Kreidler, of the First National Bank of Michigan City. No assistant cashier has been appointed in place of W. W. Vail.

The comptroller of the currency has approved the application of J. C. Lavene, W. E. Bridge, J. E. Brennan, W. J. McAleer, Emil Minas and O. A. Krinbill to organize the American National Bank of Hammond, Ind., with a capital stock of $100,000.

Michigan City is soon to have a postal savings banks. Postmaster-General Hitchcock today designated 50 additional depositories, 23 of which are in the middle west and among the number is Michigan City. This city has the distinction of being the third Indiana city chosen. Princeton was the first and Gary the second. The operation of the 200 or 300 postal savings banks so far opened has been so successful that the postmaster-general has determined to name 100 new depositories instead of 50 each week hereafter.

Red Oak, Iowa, has been designated as a new postal savings bank.

FREDERICK I. KENT

Frederick I. Kent, vice-president of the Bankers' Trust Company of New York City, recently addressed the members of Group One, of the Ohio Bankers Association, at their annual meeting at the Country Club. Mr. Kent is one of the recognized authorities on foreign exchange in this country. He began his banking career as a clerk in the First National Bank of Chicago and worked himself up to manager of the foreign department of the bank. He left Chicago to go with the Bankers' Trust Company. Mr. Kent is one of the active forces in the American Bankers Association.

Des Moines, June 1.—The program for the coming convention of the Iowa Bankers Association has been practically completed. Senator W. S. The convention will be called to order at Mason City, Thursday, June 15th, at 10 o'clock by President John McHugh of Sioux City. The invocation will be asked by Rev. Lucius C. Clark of Mason City.

Ellis, president Security Trust and Savings Bank of Charles City; "Reminiscences by the First President of the I. B. A.," G. L. Group One Meeting

Bankers of Group One were present in full force at Sioux City last week. Headquarters were at the Y. M. C. A. Building. George S. Parker, president of the Live Stock National gave the address of welcome. J. Fred Mattert of Sibley responded. John McHugh, president of the First National, Sioux City, spoke on taxation of moneys and credits. E. J. Curtin, of Decorah spoke on "Observations of the Postal Savings Bank and its Workings." Secretary P. W. Hall of the I. B. A. gave an address. After a buffet lunch, Arthur Reynolds of the Des Moines National spoke on the Aldrich plan. At 3:30 the group adjourned to attend the Western League base ball game. Dinner was at 6:30 at the Commercial Club. An interesting program of toasts was given. W. H. Eddy of Boyden was elected chairman and C. J. Wohlenberg of Holstein was chosen secretary.

Postal Savings Banks

Mr. Curtin's paper on the Postal Savings Bank at Decorah, the first established in Iowa, was an interesting feature of the group meeting. The paper was written by R. Algyr, cashier of the Winneshiek County State at Decorah. He was unable to be present. The paper declared that the postal savings bank at Decorah is generally regarded in that community as a joke. The people, upon discovering that their money is deposited with the post-office and then re-deposited by the government in the regular banks, decided that the postal end of the affair was an unnecessary inconvenience. The total deposits in the postal bank are about $337 while the Decorah Bank in which this is deposited has $5,100 deposited in Washington as a bond. Mr. Curtin said that many of the Decorah postal depositors put in $1 each so as to get certificates of deposit for souvenirs.

Arthur Reynolds' Address Feature of Group Two Meeting

The address of Arthur Reynolds on the Aldrich plan was the feature of the meeting of Group Two at Webster City last week. The convention endorsed E. J. Curtin of Decorah for president of the state association, W. G. C. Bagley of Mason City for treasurer and P. W. Hall of Sheldon for secretary. There is a general belief that the coming state convention will place the selection of secretary of the state association in the hands of the executive council as this is provided in the by-laws. C. E. Narey of Spirit Lake was elected chairman of the group for next year.

Taxation of Banks

Attorney-General Cosson has handed down an important ruling relative to the taxation of banks under the new moneys and credit tax law. He holds that the value of real estate in which the capital stock of the bank is invested may be deducted from the value of the shares of stock when the latter are listed for taxation under the new law. This is to prevent double taxation such as would exist were both assessed.

Julius E. Burmeister

Julius E. Burmeister, who has enjoyed the distinction of being the youngest bank president in the state, considering the size of the institution, has resigned the presidency of the Iowa National at Davenport. Mr. Burmeister has been ill and he resigned because of that and because he wished to give more time to personal business enterprises. He has been in the constant employ of the bank for 20 years. At the age of 14 he started in as errand boy. He gradually worked up until he was chosen president last September. Mr. Burmeister retains his place on the directory board. He also retains his large holdings in the institution.

Forger Sentenced to Seven years

Grover W. Reynolds, arrested in Oklahoma on an indictment charging forgery returned at Waterloo, was sentenced to seven years in the state reformatory by Judge Platt at Waterloo last week. Reynolds pleaded guilty to the charge. He admitted passing worthless paper on at least fifty firms in various states. The young man had a pathetic letter of intercession from his mother at Markle, Ind. This letter was given to Reynolds by the court who advised him to read it each day. Many forgeries are being reported in Iowa these days despite the vigilant efforts of Secretary Hall of the state bankers association.

The bankers at Davenport held their annual summer excursion and picnic May 24th. They boarded the steamer W. W., 150 strong and went to Linwood where a program of sports was given. The second picnic this summer will be held in July or August.

Reports compiled by the secretary of state show that 4,223 automobiles, representing an approximate expenditure of $3,378,400 have been purchased by Iowans since January 1st. At the present time there are in Iowa 28,012 automobiles, worth probably $22,409,600. The record shows that each day there are fifty machines purchased in Iowa, mostly by farmers and residents of the smaller towns.

Banking Notes

An important bank change is announced from Sioux City. G. R. Whitmer has been elected president and director of the Farmers Trust and Savings, succeeding James F. Toy, who remains as president of the Farmers Loan and Trust, which is the head of a chain of banks of which the savings bank is one. It is also announced that the capital stock of the savings bank and of the Farmers Loan and Trust is increased from $400,000 to $500,000. Mr. Toy has no intention of retiring, but the change is made because of the desire to get new men to assist in caring for the business of the institution which is increasing rapidly.

Two Iowa bankers have been named by Governor Carroll on the new tax revision committee which will go over the tax laws of Iowa and suggest changes when the next legislature meets. The bankers are Charles Voss of Davenport and J. H. McConlogue of Mason City. Others on the commission are M. H. Cohen of Des Moines, B. E. Stonebreaker of Rockwell City and A. C. Ripley of Garner.

The First National at Milford has let the contract for a new brick building to a Waterloo construction firm.

Several bogus checks on the Davenport Savings were cashed by various merchants in Davenport.

The Farmers Bank at Leighton announces a new building this summer.

BANKERS ELECT OFFICERS

Officers for the ensuing year were elected by both the Missouri and Kansas Bankers convention in Kansas City, Kan. They follow:

For Missouri—A. H. Waite, Joplin, president; R. R. Calkins, St. Joseph, vice-president; J. B. Jennings, Moberly, treasurer, and W. F. Keyser, Sedalia, secretary.

For Kansas—John R. Lindburg, Pittsburgh, president; W. W. Bowman, Topeka, secretary.

TAFT TO ADDRESS BANKERS

Announcement is made that President Taft has accepted an invitation to attend the convention of the New York State Bankers Association, which meets at Manhattan Beach, June 22d and 23d. Martin W. Littleton will also be one of the speakers upon that occasion.

BANKER OWNS RESORT HOTEL

Illinois and Indiana banking acquaintances of W. J. De Vol, president of the First National Bank and vice-president of the Citizens Trust Company, Lebanon, Indiana, will find him during the heated term at the Terrace Inn, Bay View, Michigan, where Mr. De Vol plays the part of "mine host." The Terrace Inn looks mighty attractive on the artistic advertising matter sent out by the management.

Marshall & Ilsley New Bank Building

Work on the demolition of the old buildings occupying the site of the new Marshall & Ilsley bank building on East Water Street, Milwaukee, is rapidly nearing completion and within a few days actual excavation and the driving of piles for the foundation of the new structure will be commenced.

The new bank building when completed some time in June, 1912, will take first rank among the most modern buildings in the entire Northwest and will represent a cost of approximately Water Street front of the new Marshall & Ilsley bank at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The river front of the building also is to have ornamental columns. Will be one of the finest in the West.

$250,000. For many months the officers and directors of Marshall & Ilsley bank have been engaged in inspecting representative banking institutions in the more prominent cities of the East, until it is said, that the plans for the new building exclude all of the objectionable features of other banking homes and embody many new and thoroughly practical ideas.

The new building will be constructed entirely of stone with granite base and will be four stories high. It will have a frontage on East Water Street of 60 feet; will be 160 feet in depth, and from the street to the topmost point will be 80 feet in height. The architectural design will conform to the Ionic style with two massive pillars on either side of the main entrance, each 6 feet high and 5 feet 8 inches in diameter. The heavy doors and window trimmings will be of bronze. Across the top of the building will appear the name "Marshall & Ilsley Bank," while yet higher up and in the center of the cornice will appear the words "Founded in 1847."

The rear or waterfront side of the building will be an innovation for Milwaukee in that it will conform closely to the architectural design of the front and provision will be made for an entrance on this side if, at some future time, a walk is constructed along the waterfront.

When the Marshall & Ilsley Bank moves into its new quarters it will then round out its sixty-fifth year of continuous existence, thus giving it the right to the title of the "Oldest Bank in the Northwest." On April 22, 1847, Samuel Marshall & Co. opened a bank at what was then known as 196 E. Water Street, or about four doors north of Huron Street on the west side of E. Water Street, as the city streets and numbers are now designated. In 1849, Charles F. Ilsley became associated with the bank and the name was changed to its present title of the Marshall & Ilsley Bank. In 1855 the bank outgrew its initial quarters and moved to the Furlong building on the southwest corner of Huron and E. Water streets. Again, in 1871, new quarters were found directly across the street, or, on the southeast corner of Huron and E. Water streets, where the bank remained until it moved to its present location in the Marshall block at 388 Broadway.

During its sixty-four years of existence there have been few changes of officers. In 1865, Frederick S. Ilsley, Gustave Reuss and Robert P. Ebert were admitted to partnership and the business was conducted as a private bank until 1888 when it was incorporated as a state bank.

The records show Samuel Marshall as president in 1888, with C. F. Ilsley, vice-president; James K. Ilsley, cashier, and Gustave Reuss, assistant cashier. In July, 1901, Samuel Marshall resigned and was succeeded as president by C. F. Ilsley. Gustave Reuss became vice-president, J. K. Ilsley, cashier, and John Campbell, assistant cashier. Following the death of C. F. Ilsley in December, 1904, Mr. Reuss became president; J. K. Ilsley, vice-president; John Campbell, cashier and J. H. Puelicher, assistant cashier. Mr. Reuss resigned January 1, 1908, and the list of officers then appeared as at present—James K. Ilsley, president; John Campbell, vice-president; J. H. Puelicher, cashier and H. J. Paine, assistant cashier.

The Marshall & Ilsley bank has been identified with many events of local history and proudly points to the fact that it safely weathered the panics of '57, '73, '93, and 1907 aside from a number of smaller panics which brought disaster to many institutions in Milwaukee and throughout the entire country.

In point of figures some interesting facts are shown. When the Marshall & Ilsley bank was incorporated in 1888 the capital stock amounted to $200,000 with deposits of $2,225,000 and total assets of $2,477,000. The statement issued in response to the call of March 7, 1911, shows deposits amounting to nearly $9,000,000, with total assets of over $10,000,000 and a combined capital, surplus and undivided profits amounting to more than $1,000,000.

J. Wilson Phelps, cashier, has been appointed president of the American Savings Bank of Los Angeles to fill the vacancy caused by the recent death of T. W. Phelps. A. M. Gibbs was made cashier.

In an interview at Omaha, J. G. Cannon, president of the Fourth National Bank of New York, said: "The decision has been largely discounted. The Standard Oil Company will probably find some other means to continue producing the same results, yet staying within the law. There may be a slight business flurry temporarily, but with no lasting results."

tration, and inspired by the mandate of our association as found in the recommendation of President Oates in his address before the last convention, and subsequent action upon such recommendation by the state bank section, I called upon P. D. Houston and I. B. Tigrett, who were selected to act with myself in the appointment of a legislative committee, and in December last the following gentlemen were named by us: E. G. Oates, Knoxville; W. A. Sadd, Chattanooga; Sterling Fort, Clarksville; S. H. Orr, Nashville; Fred Collins, Milan, and E. L. Rice of Memphis.

This committee met and selected Mr. Sadd as its chairman. At their request the nominating committee served with them in an ex officio capacity. You will observe that this committee has been selected from different sections of the state. These gentlemen entered vigorously upon the work, and met in Nashville several times preparing a bill to be offered for passage by the 57th general assembly. With the laws of the states of New York, Minnesota, Illinois, Ohio, Virginia, and the recently enacted Alabama law before them, they diligently worked upon and formulated a bill with special reference to Tennessee conditions. In a most thorough manner they considered every phase of the subject. Time and again the members of this committee left their respective homes and places of business to meet here in Nashville and consider section by section the banking bill framed by them. Taking the splendid Alabama law as a basis, they finally agreed upon a measure which, to my mind, was the best code of banking laws ever framed, not excepting the "National Banking Act." This bill was printed and a copy mailed to members of the association. A number of bankers promptly objected to various sections. An organized movement of opposition was soon evident. The committee invited the objecting bankers to meet them and reason together, which was done. As the result of such meeting the original bill was revised and a copy of the redrafted measure was again mailed to the members. The bankers of the state seemed much more favorably disposed towards this measure. Soon thereafter our legislative committee met with the banking committees of both the senate and house, and these committees voted to recommend the bill for passage. The members of the legislative committee were congratulating themselves upon the favorable outlook when an exodus to Alabama of members of the house occurred, breaking a quorum, and legislation has since been impossible.

This brief resume of the work done by the members of this committee cannot give you an adequate idea of the amount of time and labor given unselfishly and patriotically by them. Their efforts failed, and I sincerely regret the necessity of reporting that fact to you. I would utterly fail in my duty if I did not publicly thank the members of this legislative committee for their untiring zeal in preparation of the bill, and the endeavor made by them to have it passed.

As a part of my administration I feel especially indebted to them for their splendid fight to secure better banking laws in Tennessee. This meeting should not adjourn without adopting resolutions of commendation for the admirable work done by this committee.

While the bill framed by them failed of passage, I confidently believe that some future legislature will enact into law practically all of its provisions. I desire to recommend that resolutions be adopted at this meeting providing that the convention of the Tennessee Bankers Association to be held in 1912, shall resolve itself into a meeting for the consideration of the banking bill as originally drawn by the present legislative committee. Agreement should be reached then and a banking bill formulated by the association, the measure to be known as the "Tennessee Bankers Association bill." Following the bankers' meeting will soon thereafter be held the state conventions of both political parties, and proper committees from our association should be appointed to wait upon the platform committee appointed at these political conventions, and request the endorsement of our bill as a part of their respective platforms. This seems to me to be the practical way of securing bank legislation. These remarks may not be strictly ethical from the standpoint of the ultra-conservative banker who has always held himself aloof from activity in political matters. I am confident, however, that the suggestion is timely. Recent events in Tennessee, to my mind, unmistakably indicate the duty of the bankers, and they should become aroused to the proper sense of public duty, and as a citizen and voter exercise on all occasions the potential influence that the banker should have in the community in which he lives. On any question affecting banks and concerning any proper bank legislation, we should feel no sectional rivalries or geographical jealousies. As we are one in purpose, so should we be one in effort. Neither should partisan or fractional politics betray us into a weakening of our forces by unwise division upon any question. With anything like concert of action by all the bankers of Tennessee, no legislative body would fail to pass measures advocated by them.

No question before the American people today presses harder for solution than finding a remedy for our defective monetary system. For many years the best thought of students of finance and currency has been given to this great subject. The present monetary system is defective and entirely lacking in flexibility. In crop moving periods when the currency of the nation should expand so as to properly provide for the movement and consequent expansion of credits, the volume of our present bond-secured currency remains rigidly fixed.

Those of you who have attended conventions of the American Bankers Association for many years have listened with interest to discussions of this subject, and with the years that have passed you have, no doubt, felt a growing interest in the question. From the time the late Mr. Eckels presented his theory of "asset currency," bankers very generally have been giving consideration to the currency problem. Many theories have been advanced. Mr. Fowler, of New Jersey, a formidable debater and wonderfully well informed on questions of currency and banking, has several times been heard at these conventions. Many others have from time to time, addressed these meetings. Although the question has been before the people for more than a generation, and considered in a haphazard way by the highest legislative body of the nation, nothing has resulted to relieve the weakness in a system that fails utterly to provide a way whereby the banks can expand their note circulation with ease and facility, and to the extent that is necessary. Each year has emphasized the importance of action, and notwithstanding the very costly lesson learned by the panic of 1907, no definite action has yet been taken. The same imperfect system, utterly lacking in inherent elasticity, fails to provide for contraction at periods when that step is necessary. Congress seems to have listened, but has not responded to the cry of the banking, commercial and industrial interests of the nation. The National Monetary Commission, made up of eighteen members, nine selected from the senate and nine from the house, was appointed by congress soon after the 1907 panic, and this commission is charged with the duty of studying the question and bringing about a plan of relief to be submitted to congress. Members of this commission have spent a great deal of time studying systems of other nations and no doubt the whole membership is diligently seeking knowledge along banking and monetary lines.

When George M. Reynolds, of Chicago, as president of the American Bankers Association, delivered his address at Chicago in September, 1909, many that listened were impressed with his statement that: "As the result of study of the financial systems of the various countries of the world, and knowledge gained from actual experience in business of some of the changes necessary in order that we may secure a system of currency that will meet all requirements of our rapidly growing business, and which will at all times command the confidence and respect of the entire business world, I am convinced that we should have established in this country a central bank, with power of note issue to be approved under government supervision and control." I think many that hitherto had entertained different ideas with respect to changes necessary in our monetary system were by this time ready to accept Mr. Reynolds' idea. It has remained for the distinguished chairman of the commission, Mr. Aldrich, to command almost world wide attention by recently offering his plan which is now receiving the close study and thought, especially of bankers throughout the United States. Eminently qualified by reason of his long experience in the highest legislative body of our country, and conceded to be a close student of all questions pertaining to banking and currency, the plan conceived by Senator Aldrich is the crowning achievement in statesmanship of this very able man. He suggests a way out of the difficulties and proposes a system of banking and currency in the United States that will meet every requirement. He has gone very much further than any other leader on the subject. The bankers of Tennessee have no doubt addressed themselves to the study of the problem, and I am pleased to state that we are to be honored at this convention by the presence of one of the leading bankers of the country, a member of the currency commission of the American Bankers Association, and you will greatly interested in what he will be good enough to say upon the subject.

J. LAURENCE SAYS ITS ROTTEN

The banking system of the United States and the relation it bears to the business men and the general public of the country were discussed by Professor J. Laurence Laughlin of the University of Chicago before the ways and means committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce, at a luncheon in the Hotel LaSalle. That the system is a farce was the contention of the speaker. "What we need is union and co-operation in face of danger," continued the speaker. "A central bank in the United States is undesirable and unsuited to conditions existing in this country. We want, and must have, a banking system which will help the entire commercial community, and not just the banks alone."

A special from Bolivar says the private bank of Elias Harris & Son, at Scio (N. Y.) in operation for 25 years has suspended, owing depositors in that vicinity $20,000 and with assets of $8,000. The largest depositor was the town of Scio. The bank paid from 3 to 6 per cent interest on deposits.

The vault of the Bangor (Me.) Savings Bank, which figured in the great fire of April 30th, containing cash and securities valued at between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000, was opened yesterday by safe experts.

Its contents were found in as good condition as when they were placed in it.

amended. (Mr. Perrin here gave in detail the chief features of the monetary plan.)

Reserve Money would Accumulate

One feature which perhaps does not present itself at first glance is that all the reserve money of the country would tend ultimately to find its way into the association's vaults. As its depositing banks would ship currency to it from time to time, these shipments would be made up indiscriminately of gold, gold certificates, greenbacks, silver certificates and national bank notes. The National Reserve Association would, of course, not reship gold or gold certificates when called upon for currency, but would send out its own notes. The gold certificates would be presented at the United States treasury, where they would be cancelled and the actual gold taken over to the vaults of the association. Through this process substantially all the gold money in the country, whether coin or gold certificates, not only that in the reserves of banks, but also that now in the pockets of the people, would gradually find its way into the vaults of the National Reserve Association and its notes would gradually form the main body of our currency.

The Greenbacks

It is conceivable, too, that the entire three hundred and forty-six million dollars of greenbacks might thus ultimately accumulate with the association. If all were present for payment at one time the government, of course, could apply only the one hundred and fifty million dollars gold held as reserve against them. If it were authorized by law the National Reserve Association could, in such a situation, take over the one hundred and fifty million dollars of gold reserve, permitting the government to cancel the three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks, which have been such a disturbing factor and have caused us such incalculable loss, and for the difference of one hundred and ninety-six millions dollars enter an open debit upon its books against the government, placing at the credit of this account the excess profits accruing to the government until the account balanced; such a debit could properly be counted as a part of the government debt, owned by the association, quite the same as if bonds were issued for it.

As the reserve money of the entire country steadily accumulated in the vaults of the association, its lending power would correspondingly increase. The gold received by it, whether creating in equal amount a liability subject to check or a bank note liability, would provide a 50 per cent reserve against that liability, and an amount sufficient for a 50 per cent reserve against a new deposit liability of equal amount which might be created by rediscounts to that extent for its customers. As the general stock of gold in the United States is now estimated at more than $1,700,000,000, the importance is apparent of this tendency of the reserve money of the country to accumulate with the association, whose normal percentage of reserve would doubtless soon be 70 per cent or 75 per cent. It would have such vast credit-extending power as to be almost beyond belief, and certainly far beyond the requirements in any panic.

With such an institution established, the strength of banks would be judged not by the cash in their vaults, but by the character and convertibility of their commercial assets.

If I have been successful in making clear the principles upon which the proposed National Reserve Association would be based, you will see the ground for the statement that, with such an institution in existence, a currency famine would be so impossible as not to be considered, and that the currency as a problem would cease to be considered at all and be regarded simply as an incident and not the vital part of the benefits which such an institution would confer upon our commerce. The vital part would be the organization of credit, through massing the country's money reserves in such a way that under normal conditions the special seasonal needs of the commerce of any section would be met without general disturbance, and in a crisis the general need would be promptly and adequately met and commercial catastrophe readily averted.

With the wide use of bank acceptances and the creation of a discount market, in which they would constantly be bought and sold, we could properly expect both our foreign and domestic commerce to have an important stimulus because of added safety, stability and economy and in due time New York could not fail to become the financial center of the world.

Whatever may be our political convictions or prejudices, Senator Aldrich and the many who have so ably aided him are entitled to our profound gratitude for the masterful way in which this great problem has been grasped and for the comprehensive solution proposed. I believe this suggested plan will bear the most critical economic analysis, that it would cause the minimum change or disturbance in our banking institutions and banking methods and that it would fortify beyond our present conception our banking institutions and the vast fabric of business interests depending upon them.

Books on Banking, Finance and Economics

Credit. By J. LAWRENCE LAUGHLIN, of the Department of Political Economy, University of Chicago. Postpaid, 53c. The nature of credit and its effect on prices have long been a subject of disagreement among economists. Its basis is commonly assumed to be money or bank reserves.

Essentials of Business Law. By FRANCIS M. BURDICK, LL. D., Professor of Law in Columbia University. 12mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

This book shows how the rules of law governing the commonest business transactions have been developed, and it tells what they are to-day. Technical law terms have been discarded as far as possible, and when they are used they are so explained and illustrated as to be easily understood. The principles of law are simplified and expressed in clear, lucid everyday speech.

Foreign Exchange. Tables converting foreign money into United States money, and United States money into foreign money at all commercial rates of exchange used in financial transactions between the United States and foreign countries. All about foreign exchange, including various forms of foreign commercial paper and terms, abbreviations, etc. For banks, bankers, steamship agents, importers, exporters and manufacturers. Cloth, $5.00.

Government Regulation of Railway Rates. By HUGO R. MEYER. A Professor of Political Economy in the University of Chicago. Postpaid, $1.60 net.

Investment Bonds. By F. LOWNHAUPT. Postpaid, $1.90. Prospective investors who wish to make advantageous use of their money will do well to take notice of this volume. The author does not theorize, but tells only plain facts of the relation of the bond to its issuing corporation, and of the general investment aspect of the instrument.

Money and Credit. By WILBUR ALDRICH. Postpaid, $1.37. This volume contains much valuable information and much sound discussion on money and credit.

The Banking and Currency Problems in the United States. By VICTOR MORAWETZ. The author takes up the problem of the national monetary commission, appointed by congress, and discusses the means of providing a permanent safe-guard against money stringencies and panics. Postpaid, $1.10.

The Principles of Money and Banking. By CHARLES A. CONANT. It is a new and complete exposition of its subject. Two volumes. Postpaid, $4.25.

The Pitfalls of Speculation. By THOMAS GIBSON. Postpaid, $1.20.

A book dealing exclusively with marginal speculation, and analyzing in a clear and simple manner the causes of failure in speculation, with a suggestion as to the remedies.

The Use of Loan Credit in Modern Business. By THORSTEIN B. VEBLEN. Postpaid, 28c.

The Investors' Catechism. By M. M. REYNOLDS. Cloth, by mail, $1.10.

"Investors' Catechism." Contains all that it is essential for the beginner to know, and opens the way for a thorough study of the whole subject of investment. The author has for the sake of clearness and simplicity adopted a catechetical style which is somewhat novel in this sort of literature.

The above books are the best of their kind, and will be promptly forwarded upon receipt of price.

GROWTH IN EXPORTATION IN 1911

Exports from the United States in the fiscal year 1911 will probably exceed by about 300 million dollars the figures of last year, and cross the two billion dollar line. The figures of exports of the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor for the ten months ending with April, show an excess of 268 million dollars over those in the corresponding months of last year, and for the single month of April, an excess of 25 million dollars over April of last year, thus indicating that the growth in exports in 1911 will approximate 300 million dollars, and the total exports of the year probably exceed two billion dollars. The chief causes of the large increase are found in the large exportation and high price of cotton, and the large exportation of manufactures.

GERMAN MORTGAGE BANKS

(From Consul General Frank D. Hill, Frankfurt on the Main.)

The 36 German mortgage banks have now more than 11,000,000,000 marks (about $2,618,000,000) loaned out on mortgages. Prussia's public debt including bonds issued to build the great network of Prussian railways, is 9,500,000,000 marks ($2,261,000,000), about $350,000,000 less than loans made on real estate by these 36 banks. Bonds issued by the banks are about half a billion marks under loans made.

Mortgages are almost wholly on city property. Out of mortgage loans amounting to $2,680,000,000 on December 31, 1910, only $160,900,000 were on rural property. Five of the 36 mortgage banks made no loans on country property.

CENTENNIAL OF SAVINGS BANKS

The centennial of the savings banks in America will be celebrated in 1916, and already plans are under way for making the occasion a notable one.

The national and state organizations of savings bank officials will co-operate with committees from the savings bank section of the American Bankers Association and the American Institution of Banking.

The Philadelphia Savings Fund Society, the Provident Institution for Savings of Boston, the Bank for Savings of New York and the Savings Bank of Baltimore, the first American savings banks, will take a leading part in the celebration.

OHIO STATE BANK FAILS

The Gambier Banking Company, a state bank, has been closed by order of the state bank superintendent. J. A. Holmes, of Columbus, has been named to take charge of the institution and wind up its affairs. The bank was capitalized at $25,500 and had deposits and assets of $130,000. Shrinkage of certain paper held as assets and inability to realize on this paper at its face value is given as the cause of the failure.

Students of Kenyon College had much money on deposit in the bank.

Wayne, June 10th. Secretary Adam Smith is "helping on the programs" for the groups and they have been splendid. He doesn't want long, written essays, as a rule, but prefers live, active men who "just talk," but do it effectively and entertainingly.

THE trusts and the labor unions both started out with high intentions. The former were to improve and cheapen production so that the consumer would benefit. The latter were going to improve wages and the condition of the laboring man. There was no talk of restraint of trade nor of throttling methods on the one hand nor employing sluggers and gun men, dynamiters and acid throwers on the other. Can't they be cured?

PEOPLES SAVINGS BANK, Cedar Rapids, shows $872,441 deposits; doubled in four years. Those Burianek, high-color outfits seem to please a lot of people.

OLD COLONY TRUST AND SAVINGS, (Chicago, not Boston) opened for business in the Old Colony Building, Dearborn and Van Buren, on Thursday last. Thad. H. Howe is president and the versatile and accomplished Ralph C. Wilson, idolized by the chapter boys, is the cashier and vice-president. The location and the board of directors with good official direction ought to win out.

C. H. HUTTIG, St. Louis, is off for a ten days' vacation, recreation and fishing.

CHARLES W. ROSS, formerly with the Commercial National, and since then in the solicitors' department of the Continental and Commercial, has resigned to become cashier of the Northern State Bank, at Grand Forks, North Dakota. Mr. Ross occupied a high position in the esteem and confidence of his superiors who are quite sorry to lose him but wish him every success in his new field. He is an ardent Chapter man and a student of banking. Kindly give him a boost when you can. He's deserving.

ARTHUR REYNOLDS of Des Moines has been kept busy at the Iowa group meetings explaining the National Reserve Association plan. Mr. Reynolds is a member of the Currency Commission and intensely conscientious in his preparation, even for the smallest group meeting. We learn from Secretary P. W. Hall that his addresses have been quite effective.

WILLIAM LIVINGSTONE repeated his Nashville success, at the state convention. He captured the town by his council address at the banquet given by the Nashville clearing house and was booked immediately for the Tennessee meeting.

THE real, live octopus can suck coffee or whiskey right through the side of a glass bottle. Little wonder his New Jersey namesake can draw such large sums from the pockets of the people.

RUMOR has it that Director of the Mint Geo. E. Roberts, pays his private secretary, Miss M. V. Kelly, $75.00 per week. Yet some say Uncle Sam is a hard master in the matter of pay.

WITH the weather kiosk on the courthouse lawn, St. Louis, showing temperature of 99 $\frac{3}{4}$ degrees who can blame Huttig or any other man with a good excuse for taking to the woods. The wonder is that more of them don't do it?

B. L. HASKINS, cashier of the Chatham and Phenix, New York, was "back home" attending the Kansas convention. B. L. began his career in a bank at Abilene, Kan., for about the same wages he might have had for carrying water to an elephant. Now he points with pride to his bank with twenty-five millions resources.

KEYSER and Bowman each have a good chance to sue the K. C. papers for libel on those "outline cuts" used convention week. Must have been "stock," used upon occasion of train hold-ups and important captures by the police.

THE latest arrivals in the "Iowa Car" on the New Orleans special are Geo. S. Parker, Sioux City; P. W. Hall, Des Moines and Jos. H. Ingwersen of Clinton. In Chicago Car there are Wm. A. Heath and John R. Noel. In the Wisconsin there is Hugo Von Oven of Beloit.

THE bakers of Missouri like certain bankers in an adjoining state have a secret committee "to do all in their power to prevent the state sanitary inspectors from invading their rights." There is a real reason in both cases. We would have better and cleaner baking and banking with universal inspection. The clean places have nothing to fear.

KANSAS BANKING CONDITION

way of handling county and city deposits is safe and I regret that this law makes it so easy to get them. I know of one board of county commissioners refusing to recognize the law.

Within the year the supreme court of the United States has released from injunctions and all other hindrances the bank guaranty of deposits laws of the states of Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska and they now are in full operation in these several states. In our state there are something over four hundred banks—about one-half—under the law and adherents of the law are in the main enthusiastic in its praises, while a majority of the bankers still are of an opinion that the principle of mutual guaranty of deposits is unsound, and must ultimately be disastrous to the banking and other business interests of the state and claim old line insurance of deposits the only safe proposition. I believe that out of all this agitation will come better banking and stronger supervision of banks. Indeed, it already has had that effect. Then by and by we shall have laws which will not, of course, prevent bank failures, but which will prevent losses from failed banks. In the last year I recall but two failures—one state and one national, both small. The state bank is now being liquidated under the guaranty law and the national was re-opened the 17th of this month with its capital of $25,000.00 unimpaired. This evidences good banking, splendid supervision by the departments, both state and national, and also reflects the soundness of the business and farming interests of our great state. Besides, we have additional and satisfying evidence of the general prosperity within our borders in the condition of the banks at last statement call in March. The total of capital, surplus and undivided profits was $44,000,000.00, total deposits $177,000,000.00 and the good, strong cash reserve of about 38 per cent. Let us hope that this great business built up by depositors, stockholders and officers may never become a football to be kicked from pillar to post by unscrupulous, designing politicians playing for the franchise of the people as it is claimed has been done in Oklahoma.

You are more or less familiar with the act of 1908, providing for the organization of clearing house associations for the purpose mainly of obtaining in time of a panic, when the actual cash is scarce, additional currency, called emergency currency—such currency secured by a pledge of good notes and commercial paper with the additional guaranty of the clearing house association. Of course, under the law, only national banks can participate, but with the national banks working in such an association the state banks would be enabled to procure currency in case of need. In all probability there will never be another currency panic, but I am very much in favor of the organization of associations in Kansas along the lines developed to such a high degree of efficiency and perfection in the Kansas City Clearing House Association, but without qualifying legally under the emergency currency act. I deem that unnecessary, for the clearing houses in many of the reserve cities have met all the requirements of the act and already are prepared to procure from the United States treasury on short notice large sums of currency, which I believe is sufficient to meet all demands. My idea is to admit state banks to membership also, and have regularly elected directors, officers and committees. I would have an association in each congressional district, with a regularly employed examiner who shall be in the field practically all the time and make his reports to the executive committee only. This would supplement the efficient service rendered by the examiners of the state and national departments, be of great assistance to those departments and, by reason of the intimate knowledge had by the committee of the officers, banks, etc., in the district, very much better banking methods would be installed, bank failures would be a remote possibility and losses resulting from failed banks a thing of the past.

While I have not made a careful study of the plan outlined by the national monetary commission, I think I am in favor of it and believe that with the national reserve association duly organized and in operation the ebb and flow of currency could be regulated to prevent a superabundance or a famine, interest rates throughout the country made uniform and reasonable and business established upon a firmer and safer basis than ever before. His proposal embodies so radical a change in our currency and banking systems that long years of education and discussion must pass before congress will write the plan into our laws.

Just a word on behalf of the American Bankers Association. It has nearly five hundred members in Kansas. Every bank for its own selfish protection should join, for out of about twenty banks burglarized in Kansas within the past ten months but one was a member of the American Bankers Association, thus proving beyond question that the professional yeggman watches for the little metal sign usually hanging over the teller's window and the bank displaying it is given a wide berth. There are many other advantages, but I will not take the time to recount them. Besides, you know what they are. A meeting of the Kansas members of that association will be held some time during this convention and at the call of G. C. Smith, A. B. A. vice-president. Kansas now has but two members on the executive council. With a membership of five hundred we will be entitled to three. As only a few are lacking, will you not make an effort to secure the requisite number to enable us to have this additional representation on the council?

I would say in conclusion that our association is prosperous and growing, and while all is not serene nor just to our liking, it never was more firmly entrenched in the hearts of the bankers and they were never more determined and willing to give it their hearty, enthusiastic and loyal support. The membership has been increased during the year by forty. There are, however, over a hundred banks that remain outside. Will not each member appoint himself a committee of one to see to it that before the next convention every bank is enrolled as a member of the association—"a consummation devoutly to be wished."

Convention Week

It is a question whether June hereafter will be celebrated on account of the many weddings which occur during that month or for the number of bankers' conventions scheduled. Seven states will hold their assemblies next week. Most of them are quite prominent on account of their state organizations and the quality of program and entertainment afforded. The travelers' section will be quite busy jumping from point to point and even the busy head of the Continental and Commercial National is down to speak at two widely separated points. Whatever may be said of the money market or of business conditions, the barometer shows high pressure in the matter of bankers' conventions.

Mason City Convention

Iowa will meet at Mason City, June 15th and 16th, for her twenty-fifth annual convention. John McHugh of Sioux City is president, G. E. MacKinnon of Des Moines is vice-president, and P. W. Hall of Des Moines is the secretary. No other conventions held during the season draw larger attendance. C. H. McNider will deliver the "Welcome to Our City" oration and George S. Parker of Sioux City will respond. There will be quartette singing throughout the sessions, and President McHugh is expected to deliver a very telling annual address. The popular E. R. Gurney of Nebraska will pay tribute to "Indian Corn as a Factor in Civilization." Were Mr. Gurney going to speak in Missouri, the corn pipe would be substituted. The light and airy performance by Mr. Gurney will be offset by a piece of heavy artillery,—J. Laurence Laughlin of the University of Chicago on the statistical subject of "Progress in Monetary and Banking Legislation." Emerson DePuy will speak a piece entitled "Our Silver Jubilee." Chas. D. Ellis of Charles City will enumerate the "Mistakes of the Country Banker." G. L. Tremaine of Humboldt, who was the first president of the Iowa association, will deliver a reminiscent talk with probably an occasional allusion to the world-wide success of his fellow-townsmen, Frank Gotch. The first secretary of the association, who held the job until Colonel Dinwiddie heard of it, will make a short talk. He is J. E. Henriques of Sioux City. After this Kent C. Ferman of Cedar Rapids will preside at the meeting of the American Bankers Association membership. James G. Berryhill of Des Moines will speak on "Recent Legislation on the Subject of Bank Taxation." Charles R. Frost, the energetic secretary of the Minnesota Bankers Association, will talk on "Educational Reform in Minnesota." More heavy artillery! George M. Reynolds of Chicago will speak on "Sound Banking," which subject with Mr. Reynolds has come to be a sort of business religion. There will be a talk on "Back to the Farm," by Professor Armstrong of Charles City.

The Mason City bankers will provide liberal entertainment for their guests and visitors. On Thursday evening there will be special vaudeville attractions and outdoor band concerts. On Friday evening there will be special

Mr. Edens (sans whiskers) appeared upon not less than three programs this week, all without the aid of a manuscript or other deceptive device. He is a "talker" of the interesting, instructive type, and has had rapid rise in banking and organization circles. He had a prominent place on the South Dakota program, and B. F. Harris says, "You'd know he came from the Garden City by the bouquets he tosses about."

W. W. Osborne is the president of the Georgia Bankers' Association, and a prominent Savannah banker. He has been a consistent worker in the ranks and deserves his spurs.

MONEY REFORM BODY ORGANIZES

Officers and committees for the National Citizens' League were chosen Wednesday at a directors' meeting at the Union League Club. The body was appointed last week by the Chicago Association of Commerce to organize a movement for currency reform. The officers are:

President—John V. Farwell.
Vice-President—John Barton Payne.
Treasurer—A. C. Bartlett.
The committee chairmen are:
Executive—J. Laurence Laughlin.
Organization—B. E. Sunny.
Finance—Fred W. Upham.
Congressional action—John Barton Payne.
Form of bill—J. Laurence Laughlin.
Publicity—Harry A. Wheeler.

The campaign for banking legislation, according to the proposition laid before the board, will be conducted in Chicago. For this purpose a central office is planned in the loop. The charter of the National Citizens' League was received from the secretary of state this week.

Notice comes from Springfield of the incorporation of the National Citizens' League for the promotion of a sound banking system, Chicago; to secure an improved banking system; incorporators, A. C. Bartlett, A. A. Sprague, J. Laurence Laughlin.

Minnesota June 21

Concerning their convention on June 21st, at Bemidji, Secretary Charles R. Frost, of Minnesota bankers, sends word that "arrangements for the entertainment of those attending are progressing satisfactorily. Indications are now that we will have a much larger number of delegates in attendance than was at first thought. Our program while short, we think is especially strong this year. Ex-Congressman James A. Tawney, of Winona, Minnesota, and Ex-Senator Lafayette Young, of Des Moines, Iowa, are our principal speakers. Mr. Tawney's subject will be "The Proposed Reforms of So-Called Progressives," and Senator Young will talk on "The Banker and Other Men."

Mr. Frost has organized a special hotel train for the trip, including a visit to International Falls.

POSTAL BANK FOR CHICAGO

The time-honored "stocking bank" will pass in Chicago shortly after July 1st. A postal savings bank will be established then adjoining the cashier's office on the Dearborn Street side of the second floor of the federal building. A new government bank will be opened every three days until 1,000 are in operation.

JOHN FLETCHER

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

ALL of the Chicago newspapers in printing the details of the almost weekly "bank" failures—such as McCarthy's last week, and Eidman's this week—put the word "bank" in quotation marks. One or two of them put the word "depositors" in quotation also. They mean by that, that the "bank" is not a real one and that the "depositors" are dupes only.

THE "story of how Morgan rid Wall Street of Morse and Heinze, and put over the steel grab" is going the rounds. As printed, it makes ugly use of the names of Clark Williams and A. Barton Hepburn. Here's hoping the latter two may be able to clear their skirts of all blame.

J. T. HOWELL in welcoming the visiting bankers to the Tennessee convention, on behalf of the Nashville clearing house said: "The banker is looked upon in every community as the embodiment not only of energy, enterprise and progress, but also of those high virtues and lofty principles which are absolutely necessary to constitute the well rounded man. From the earliest history of our present civilization, the banking profession has been classed as one of the most honorable avocations, and the men who are chosen to occupy positions of trust and responsibility are selected not only by reason of their ability as financiers, but also and with equal reason, because they have been tried in the balances of integrity and are not found wanting."

LOUIS G. KAUFMAN, president of the consolidated Chatham and Phenix, New York, has had another introductory dinner. The first was by L. E. Pierson, ex-president of the American Bankers Association. The second was by Frank R. Lawrence at the Lotus Club. Among the notables present were Melville E. Stone, John I. Waterbury, R. W. Poor, William Loeb, and Morgan J. O'Brien.

T. W. McCOY of the Merchants National at Vicksburg has a proposal which is worthy of consideration. Let him who has news on the subject say what he would like to do. Following is Mr. McCoy's kindly offer to those who will go by the Chicago Train de Luxe to the New Orleans convention.

"OUR Military Park here is the most extensive of any in the country, and its historical interest, of course, is known to all. It takes from four to six hours to go through the park. We could take care of the party, show them through the park by automobile, and give them a very pleasant stay here. Your state, alone, has spent something like three hundred thousand dollars in our park, and the country at large several millions. The stop-over here of six to eight hours could be made most delightful, and we would like to hear from you, with the hopes that you can get the special in which you are interested to stop over here."

"COL." J. M. DINWIDDIE, the dean of the secretaries (no wretired), is going to New Orleans on the big train. Eight cars full but room for as many more. Come on in, the water's fine.

A BELATED report from Secretary F. M. Mayfield of Tennessee shows that "there are 473 banks in the state. Of course number 99 are national banks and 372 are state banks. Of these we have as members 460 which shows an increase of 13 over the number reported at last year's convention. These have been entirely recruited from the new banks incorporated. There still are 13 non-members, and we urge every banker to assist us in securing the remaining number."

SECRETARY MAYFIELD has hopes of converting that unlucky 13, and places the ideal association at "every bank a member." The income of the association is $5,163.36, all of which was spent in benefits.

TENNESSEE has an advanced insurance department and aspires to further perfection. See old man Bowman, out on the Kaw, for pointers of "how to get 'em in."

LEXINGTON AVENUE is getting to be a bankers' row, out Hyde Park way. New householders are H. A. Wheeler of Union Trust and A. G. Farr of the Harris Trust. Even our good friend J. Fletcher Farrell has been looking about over there "for a little garden in which to build a house."

L. E. STEVENS, who went to the head of the Century Savings at Des Moines two years ago, has a right to toot his horn, and to toot it hard. The deposits were $468,797.59 then. A year later they were $642,544.65 and now are $743,522.66. There was no "buying" of deposits and no "flattering inducements" offered. All on the square and for keeps.

"MAY, 1911, will go down in the annals of history" says Spencer Trask & Co. "as marking an epoch in American jurisprudence, for during that month the supreme court of the United States had in two cases of paramount importance announced that it stands squarely for the 'rule of reason,' and that demagogism has as little to expect from it as has power derived from unlimited wealth. All through the maze of legal and technical verbiage surrounding both the Standard Oil and the American Tobacco cases, this one fact stands out with impressive clearness, and that one fact alone is worth all the market has suffered while the court's decision was forthcoming."

JAMES J. TOWNSEND is the new president of the Chicago Stock Exchange. Blacksmith, politician and broker—good at all of them. In what "Parson" Davis used to call "a gentlemanly demonstration of the manly art of self-defense"—in earnest or in fun, Townsend never knew how to lose. He made good at every thing he tried!

TOUGH on Harry A. Gross of the C. & N. W. to have the "gout" just as they are opening that $25,000,000 new station with all its glories and advantages. Nice place to start a bankers special from.

B. B. CASTLE, the John the Baptist of Illinois in matters relating to country clearings, spoke at the Pontiac group meeting on Friday on this subject. He prefers the Connecticut plan (as between that state and New York) but advocates a milder one in hope of suiting the conservatism of the Chicago Clearing House. Mr. Castle gets bouquets and attention when he speaks but thus far "nothing doing."

HIS bank out at Arlington Heights has jumped the half million mark and as a reward of merit for having done so well, is to have a rival. John Hattendorf, a retired maltster of Roselle, Ill., is organizing a new state bank at the Heights.

SO that every man who has the price, and every village, even the unincorporated, may have a bank. William Busse, former president of the county board and at present a commissioner, will head a $25,000 national bank. Mt. Prospect, population less than 100. Wm. Busse, Jr., will be cashier. Some people think there ought to be a bank at every section line corner in the county. Brewers once thought the same about saloons but being "wise" they divided the territory.

PENNSYLVANIA abandons Bedford Springs, this year, and the state convention will meet at the Hotel Stratford, Philadelphia, next Tuesday and Wednesday, June 13th and 14th, same days as Michigan, at Detroit. William A. Law is president of the Pennsylvania and wanted his home town to have a look in. Before Bedford Springs days Philadelphia and Pittsburgh about divided the honors.

J. A. S. POLLARD of the Fort Madison Savings Bank, is utilizing the big dam in the Mississippi which is to do so much for his city, in advertising his bank. They expect the big turbines to yield 300,000 horsepower, and to create a dam of 100 square miles.

"THE Purchasing Power of Money," is the title of a new book soon to issue from the MacMillan Company, New York. The author is Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale and the book has been called a "masterpiece in economics" by the critics. Similar books by Dr. Fisher have met with great success.

MORE power to the strong right arm of ex-Mayor John P. Hopkins. The fact that he has held public office and has been successful in business gives the cheap reformer no license to retail libelous "secrets" to the uninitiated. President J. J. Townsend of the Chicago Stock Exchange, once brought a newspaper publisher to book in the same way, accompanied with a promise to repeat if necessary.

IF more men had physical courage, certain newspaper abuses would be stopped for good. During a campaign some liberty of speech and a few exaggerated paragraphs are to be expected. In the case of ex-Mayor Hopkins the offense was purely malicious and had not even the pretense of being done for the

South Dakota Convention

President C. H. Barrett, of Vermont, reviews conditions and makes suggestions in an able paper

It is comparatively easy for banks to prosper in good times, when prices of commodities are advancing, real estate values constantly increasing and business generally going forward with leaps and bounds. But when business slackens, values shrink, deposits decrease and demands for loans become more insistent, the vocation of the banker ceases to be one of delightful ease. And woe to him then, whose house is not in order, whose loans are not carefully placed, well secured and collectible.

For several years, we have seen prices of farm products advance until they reached levels beyond the expectation of the most sanguine; values of real estate rise rapidly and continuously until it seemed the upward movement would never cease. Deposits in the banks of our state increased from $14,000,000 in 1900 to nearly $90,000,000 in 1910. Our farmers have grown rich, real estate dealers prospered beyond belief, merchants and all classes have also shared in the general prosperity. To be sure, the cost of living had also increased but what matter to us of the producing West, while profits and income were increasing by greater percentages.

That movement reached its climax during the year just passed. The era of high prices has passed and for several months a steady decline has been in progress. The values of certain farm products have declined fully fifty per cent and the question now is, where will it stop? Add to this the fact that owing to a lack of sufficient moisture in the year 1910, our crop production was materially curtailed, and the situation is complete.

Under such circumstances, it is but natural that at least a few banks might be expected to show effect of poor management and adverse conditions. No doubt such have been found. If so, under the skillful handling of the authorities in charge, under whose exactions we all groan, say things and finally obey, the weak individuals have all been imbued with new life. And I am able to announce that not one of the 630 state and national banks of South Dakota has failed during the year.

I heartily congratulate you gentlemen thereupon and I congratulate equally the department of the public examiner and that of the comptroller of the currency.

Guaranty of Deposits

To this gratifying condition, as well as to the confidence in the departments named and to the fact that our banking laws have been materially strengthened, can be largely attributed the defeat of the guaranty deposit bill introduced at the recent session of the legislature. Following the sweeping decision of the supreme court of the United States upholding similar laws of the states of Nebraska and Oklahoma, it was greatly feared that the measure would be thrust on us. It however suffered defeat.

It is clearly apparent that conservative bankers are unwilling to stand responsible for the shortcomings and mismanagement of whoever may be inclined to embark in the business. And further agitation on this question may be expected in the states concerned until a more satisfactory solution is reached.

New Legislation

Of the several bills recommended by the American Bankers Association, two were enacted into laws at the recent session of the legislature. One authorizing notaries public, who are officers or stockholders of a bank, to take acknowledgment on any instrument running to or executed by such corporation. Another authorizing the payment of deposits, made in the name of two persons, to either or the survivor. A law providing for the regulation of trust companies was passed. The state banking law was amended, providing for increased fees for examinations and increasing and more clearly defining the authority of the public examiner in cases of failure.

Postal Savings

On January third, the new postal savings system was inaugurated by the federal government, by the establishment of one bank in each state in the union. While the system is declared by its friends to be highly successful, its growth during the first three months of its existence has been quite moderate and without showing any signs of the baneful effects anticipated by many bankers. The total number of accounts opened in the 48 offices during the first quarter was 4,307 and the total deposits, $201,961, an average of about $47.00 to each account. At the Deadwood office 27 accounts were opened in that period, with total deposits of $1,193.00. Additional depositories have been established increasing the number to 129 and more will be added as rapidly as possible.

National Reserve Association Plan

The result of the investigation and labors of the National Monetary Commission have been made public in the informal announcement, contemplating a system of local associations of national banks, 15 district associations, all leading up to one central association or bank, to be known as The National Reserve Association, which is designed to be a bank of banks. The scheme has been carefully worked out, with the idea of eliminating the objections urged against a central bank, as well as removing the weak features of our present unsatisfactory system. It has been well received and the campaign of education is now on in earnest.

It is significant, that the executive council of the American Bankers Association has heartily approved the plan, after suggesting some changes, particularly that of extending the benefits to state banks and trust companies. The executive council declares: "We believe that it is thoroughly practical, fundamentally sound and comprehensive and that if enacted into law it will correct all the principal defects of our present banking and currency system."

It is hoped great interest in the question and plan will be taken by all thinking people of our country, as well as by congress and all directly concerned, and that a law will be eventually enacted that will prove to be all that is desired and so much needed.

Interstate Protective Association

Since 1908, we have been affiliated with the bankers' associations of Minnesota, Iowa, and North Dakota in the Interstate Protective Association, organized for the purpose of preventing burglaries upon our members as well as the apprehension of criminals after operating. The share of cost to this association at first was $600.00 a year, which has increased until our share during the current year reached $100.00 a month. This if persisted in the entire year, would have absorbed nearly one half our entire income. It became a matter of serious concern whether or not to continue our membership. Payments were kept up however until the close of 1910, when it was thought that the mantle of the far famed Dakota winter would protect us from the ravages of the yeggman.

The services rendered by this protective association have been very satisfactory. Until the latter part of May, there had been but four bank burglaries attempted in our state during the year just completed, not one of which was successful. And in each case the criminals were eventually captured and convicted. On May 26th, the Farmers Savings Bank of Tea was robbed of about $1,400.00. The same day, three of five men believed to have been implicated, were captured by the Sioux Falls police and about one half the loss recovered.

Comparing this with the records of Kansas and Missouri we may consider ourselves extremely fortunate. In those states during the fall of 1910, burglaries were reported with startling frequency, fifteen in Kansas alone since the first of September.

In view of these facts, it would seem that we could little afford to withdraw our membership and go without protection of this kind. The service appears to be well worth its cost and should be continued.

In conclusion, I wish to thank the officers and members of the association for the many courtesies extended to me during the year and may peace and prosperity ever continue to abide with you.

CONVENTION WEEK

cial trains and automobile service to Clear Lake where there will be boating and a picnic lunch. Special entertainment will be provided for the ladies.

Detroit Convention

The Michigan bankers also will hold their twenty-fifth annual convention next week at Detroit and on the waters of Lake Erie. The convention will be called Tuesday morning at Hotel Pontchartrain and in the evening there will be a splendid banquet tendered by the Detroit bankers. At this banquet George M. Reynolds of Chicago and Honorable Robert W. Bonyne from Colorado and a member of the National Monetary Commission will be the speakers. Convention sessions will be held at the hotel with automobile trips about the city between times. On Wednesday evening Detroit bankers will tender the guests and visitors a ball in the dancing hall of the great Hotel Pontchartrain, and on Thursday morning the members and guests will leave by steamer for Buffalo and Niagara Falls. During this trip the steamer will stop at Livingstone Channel to view the government work at that point. The boat will arrive at Buffalo on Friday morning and pay a visit to the Falls. The leaving time has been arranged so that the visitors will make train connections out of Detroit, Saturday afternoon. Emory W. Clark of Detroit is president of the association and H. M. Brown of Detroit is secretary.

Philadelphia Convention

The Pennsylvania bankers will hold their seventeenth annual convention on Tuesday and Wednesday. Addresses of welcome will be delivered by Mayor Reyburn and by Francis B. Reeves, president of the clearing house. Wm. A. Law is president and will preside at all of the sessions. His annual address and the annual report of Secretary D. S. Kloss will occur at the first session on Tuesday. One of the features of the session will be a joint debate between teams representing A. I. B. chapters of Scranton and Pittsburgh. Among the speakers are Edward D. Page of New York, Chas. A. Snyder of Pottsville, Albert A. Jackson of Philadelphia, and A. Piatt Andrew. The visitors will be entertained by a series of smokers, vaudeville shows, and ball games. Ladies will be taken to the principal theatres and there will be a trip by steamer down the Delaware River. Jos. Wayne, Jr., of the Girard National heads the committee on arrangements and Wm. A. Law heads the committee on program, hence the perfection of these two important features of the convention.

Other Conventions

Other conventions which will be held next week are Idaho, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday; California at Lake Tahoe on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday; Virginia at the Hot Springs on the same dates; and Maine at Portland on Saturday and Sunday. Splendid programs have been provided for these four conventions, the important details of which already have been printed in THE CHICAGO BANKER. The fact that seven important states hold their conventions on practically the same days is another argument in favor of the secretaries' section of the American Bankers Association getting down to business and furnishing the bankers and the public a series of consecutive, non-conflicting dates.

$200,000 BANK FOR DENVER

Washington, June 5.—The comptroller of the currency to-day received an application to convert the Federal State and Savings Bank of Denver, Col., into "The Federal National Bank of Denver," capital $200,000.

BANKING CONDITIONS GOOD IN WASHINGTON

Spokane, June 6.—Group One, Washington, taking in Adams, Franklin, Lincoln, Pend Oreille, Spokane, Stevens and Whitman counties, was formally organized at a meeting in the assembly room of the Old National Bank in Spokane, with these executive officers: President, W. H. Martin, cashier Pioneer National, Ritzville; vice-president, W. R. Baker, cashier Bank of Colville; secretary-treasurer, B. L. Jenkins, Union Securities Company, Spokane. The executive committee was composed of R. H. Macartney, cashier Second National of Cheney, and W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National, Spokane.

J. Grier Long, president of the Spokane Clearing House Association, presided at the opening session, where addresses of welcome were delivered by Governor Marion E. Hay of Washington; Charles M. Fassett, commissioner of public utilities; Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National and Spokane chamber of commerce, and Mr. Long.

W. H. Martin, president of the Pioneer National of Ritzville, was elected temporary chairman, and B. L. Jenkins of the Union Securities Company of Spokane was elected secretary.

Optimism was expressed in reports at the roll call of counties, as follows:

Adams county—J. F. Lansing, cashier German-American, Ritzville: "There never has been a time in the history of the county when the crops promised better in quality and quantity. Unless untoward climatic conditions intervene between now and harvest, we cannot help having better than an average crop."

Franklin county—W. H. Miller, cashier of the Connell State, Connell: "We have a wonderful growth of wheat. It is waist high to an ordinary man, who can stand and look straight down without seeing the ground. There is eight inches of moisture in the ground."

Lincoln county—Harvey G. Burns, Reardan: "We have about twice the moisture this year that we had last year. The spring and winter wheat look fine. All we want is warm weather. The cherry and peach crop around Creston will be good. In fact, it is going to be a good harvest all along the line."

Pend Oreille—R. W. Anderson, Newport: "We have the largest cement plant in the state and the largest body of standing white pine. The fire has really done us good, as it cleared some brush lands and compelled the stumping of some timber lands. Our county is adapted for berries, orchards and intensive farming, but we depend on our timber and the reports from the Mississippi Valley markets are most encouraging."

Spokane—M. M. Cook, National Bank of Commerce, Spokane: "Locally, things are in the best condition for years and our next statement will show it. We need more production and our chamber of commerce is going after new manufacturers."

Stevens—W. R. Baker, Bank of Colville, Colville: "The abundant rains have benefited the hay crop. Our bank deposits are in excess of what they were a year ago and our loans are less. Stevens county is in a very prosperous condition."

Whitman—George C. Jewett, National Bank of Palouse, Palouse: "Nature never goes back on the Palouse country. We never had better prospects. The rains came at just the right time and the crops were ready to be rained on. Whitman county will produce a crop and it looks like a bumper. More than that, we have a bigger acreage than we ever had before and you Spokane bankers can build extensions on your vaults. We're going to send you more money."

The Boston system of handling country bank checks was explained by W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National Bank, Spokane, and A. F. McClaine, president of the Traders' National Bank, Spokane. Henry Vollmer of Davenport, Iowa, made a witty speech, which was the hit of the afternoon. Overdrafts and exchange also were discussed.

Charles E. McLean, cashier of the Traders' National Bank, Spokane, presided at the banquet in the Hall of the Doges, where the visitors were entertained in the evening. Besides the executive officers of the newly established group were Mayor William J. Hindley, Commissioner Fassett, Edwin T. Coman, J. Grier Long, J. P. M. Richards, president of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company and C. W. Winter.

ADDRESS ON CREDITS BY J. J. ROUSE

When Group One, Washington, met at Spokane a trite address on Credits was delivered by Cashier Rouse, of the First National of Pullman. He said in part: "Believing that credits, like a man's legs, should have something substantial to rest upon, it is at present necessary for us to meet conditions as they exist, rather than theorize about how they should exist; and so long as we face the one-crop condition, why delude ourselves and our customer by writing a note maturing at a time when we know we will be unable to meet it. Aside from the advantage of adding interest to principal every two or three months, we see nothing to be gained, and this is more than offset by the customer's liability to contract the permanent habit of renewal, so that when you send him a notice of maturity of any obligation that you would really like to have him meet, he offers you a new note, instead of the alfalfa that satisfies a depositor; and when you drop a gentle hint that payment would be appreciated, he sails into the air with 'What's the matter with you fellows? Are you hard-up, or don't you think I am good for it?'"

ELECT OFFICERS

Officers for the ensuing year elected by the Oklahoma bankers convention at Oklahoma City, are as follows: President, T. J. Hartman of Sulphur; first vice-president, Asa E. Ramsey of Muskogee; second vice-president, G. E. Dowis of Blackwell; secretary, W. B. Harrison of Enid; and treasurer, I. H. Nakdimen of Sallisaw.

Diversified Investment

This Company suggests to careful investors the advisability of dividing their funds among bonds of various classes, in this way obtaining a well diversified investment. Investments made in this manner will possess the individual qualities of the respective classes in combination, thus making the investment well balanced. For instance, we own and offer a 5% railroad bond, a 6% short term note, a 4½% equipment bond and a 6% industrial bond, netting at present prices

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED

South Dakota Convention

Sioux Falls, S. D., June 8.—The twentieth annual convention of the South Dakota Bankers Association convened in this city yesterday morning and drew an unusual attendance. The delegates met formally in the forenoon of Wednesday for the purpose of registration and preliminary organization. At the afternoon session held at the new theatre, the convention was called to order by President C. H. Barrett of Vermillion. The address of welcome was delivered by Editor C. M. Day of the Argus-Leader, and the response was by O. L. Branson. Following this came the annual address of President Barrett and the appointment of the various committees. The reports of the secretary, J. E. Platt, and of the treasurer, J. R. McKnight, were then submitted with that of the executive council by F. C. Danforth. The big event, of course, of the Wednesday session was the address by George M. Reynolds of Chicago on "Credits and Currency." In the evening of Wednesday the guests and delegates were entertained at the Majestic Theatre.

Thursday Session

This morning the delegates were treated to an automobile tour of the city and among other places visited the large packing house. In the afternoon the convention listened to an address by W. G. Edens of the Central Trust Company of Chicago. Mr. Edens devoted his time to an entertaining rehearsal of the methods employed in successfully organizing groups and state associations and in showing the benefits to be derived from them. Following Mr. Eden's talk was a general discussion of bank taxation subjects led by R. H. Warren of Sioux Falls. Next came an inimitable address by J. Adam Bede of Duluth, who has a world wide reputation as a humorous orator. This second day session concluded with the election and installation of officers.

Editor Day Welcome Visitors

Charles M. Day, editor of the Argus Leader, gave an address of welcome to the visitors, during which he said: "I am glad to greet so many bankers at a time when I am not trying to borrow any money. I am glad to say a word of welcome on behalf of Sioux Falls, because the bankers of South Dakota have done and are doing a big share of the work of building up this great state, and because it may be convenient for me in the future for purposes of identification to have my face known to so many bankers. We have a great state here, with only 600,000 people scattered over 77,000 square miles of area. If the resources of the state were known outside, as we know them here, it would not be long before our population would pass the million mark. For eleven successive years, South Dakota has produced the largest per capita of new wealth of any state in the Union, and one need only to look at the radiant fields of South Dakota on this June day to safely predict that 1911 will make the record an even dozen. A few weeks ago I stood at the bread line in New York City and saw between 500 and 600 men line up at midnight to get a stale loaf of bread. Within a few minutes' ride of that place was a private residence which rents for $100,000 a year. As I saw the pitiful and broken line of stranded men, willing to wait until midnight, for the poor boon of a crust of bread, I said to myself, 'Thank God, that South Dakota has no private residence which rents for $100,000 a year, and thank God she has and needs no breadline.' Why, in all South Dakota you couldn't line up a dozen men in the line, if at the other end of it there was a Morrell ham, a bottle of beer, and a good 10-cent cigar.

"I give you a hearty welcome to the metropolis of South Dakota. I wish to express the hope that your meeting will be a great success, and that you will like us so well that you will want to come again—often and soon."

Talk on Bank Stock Taxation

R. H. Warren, a distinguished Sioux Falls attorney, spoke on the valuation of bank stocks for taxation purposes.

The matter he presented related to a local question concerning the valuation of bank stock for purposes of taxation now pending before the supreme court of that state, a case in which the several banks of Sioux Falls were (Continued on page 15)

Convention at Tybee

William W. Osborne, president of Georgia bankers, reviews advances of the year and commends work done

When we review the past twelve months, making note of the many nation-wide problems that have during that period obtruded themselves upon us, imperatively demanding immediate solution; when we reflect that the solution of such great problems as reciprocity, the leveling of the tariff to a revenue basis, freeing the American public from the tyranny of gigantic industrial monopolies, the all important currency question—each and every suggestion thereto laden with momentous consequences to the country's business—are yet the incompleting tasks of our wisest men, we should be highly gratified that business has pursued the even tenor of its way and that prosperity has continued her abode with us.

We have been blessed with fair crops. They have commanded good prices. Our industrial enterprises have been forced to live frugally but not uncomfortably. The demand for a guaranteed bill of lading made by foreign bankers which last year this time threatened so seriously to impede the movement of our cotton happily has not been insisted upon. Confidence in our financial institutions, restored after the flurry of 1907, has not been shaken. So that on the whole, while we are able to chronicle no great augmentation in business; though the business man has contented himself with resting upon his oars and merely drifting with the current, yet, taking it all in all, we have had a very satisfactory year.

I have referred to the fact that our great currency problem is as yet unsolved. I feel I cannot more profitably spend the few minutes allowed me by the program than by reiterating the complaint of your last president at the tardiness of congress in giving us some constructive legislation upon this vital problem. There is most urgent need by the business world of a sound currency issued upon a scientific basis, the volume of which will increase and decrease automatically with the needs of legitimate business. Our perilous experience of 1907 is directly traceable to a failure on the part of the government to furnish such currency and to provide for its proper distribution. The prompt and proper solution of this problem is absolutely essential if the business of the country is to pursue a peaceful uninterrupted course—if we are to have a continuation of prosperity and a contented people. Why should there be longer delay? We have already taken the preliminary steps. An intelligent and exhaustive research has been made. We have all the light that the lamp of experience can shed. I may with propriety go further and say that a well considered plan for a solution of the problem has been suggested.

Whenever we arrive at a conviction based upon earnest study, it is the duty of every member of this association to give expression thereto; for, under our form of government, by agitation only and the consequent education that comes therefrom can we hope to create a public sentiment that will command the enactment of relief laws.

There is no dissenter to the proposition that three things are essential to effect proper currency reformation;

(1) A scientific basis for the issuance of currency making available as such basis all forms of wealth; instead of utilizing as we do now only the credit of the government and the credit of the issuing bank.

(2) The ability to expand or contract the volume of currency in accordance with business needs automatically by the imposition of taxation on a sliding scale on the currency itself.

(3) A central reserve fund assuring the noteholder of redemption at his option into specie of practically unchangeable value; and assuring the isolated banking unit a reservoir from which it may replenish its reserves in times of stringency by the medium of re-discount.

The suggested plan put out by the national monetary commission embodies these three reforms. The enactment of the plan of the commission into law as it is presented and without amendment will in my judgment furnish relief and prove a great blessing to the people of this country. I am convinced the plan suggested will ultimately furnish the basis for any plan which solves the problem.

I have no longer any prejudice against a central bank. I am an open advocate of the central bank idea along the lines laid down by the suggested plan of the monetary commission; provided such central bank be not privately owned; provided such central bank is a government institution engaged in the beneficent function of furnishing currency to all our banks by means of re-discounts.

I have confessed already I did not always entertain this view. Not having made a study of the problem I labored in common with many others under a vague idea that Andrew Jackson was opposed to a great central bank. I had a blind confidence in his judgment so I also was opposed to the idea. I grew up in my error. Any student of history however, who makes the research will discover that such prevalent impression does Mr. Jackson injustice. It is true Mr. Jackson made history and imperish-

FAVORS THE NATIONAL RESERVE ASSOCIATION

Cashier R. P. Loomis, of the First National at Malden, speaking at the Spokane group meeting came out strongly for the National Reserve Association plan which, in a carefully prepared paper, he fully explained. In concluding, Mr. Loomis said:

No objection can be raised by the public that this is a banking scheme for concealed and excessive profits, as after the payment of expenses stockholders will receive 4 per cent. Profits above that go one half to the surplus fund until it reaches 20 per cent of the capital, one fourth to the government and one fourth to the stockholders until their share reaches 5 per cent in all, when they receive no more. After surplus reaches 20 per cent also, all profits over 5 per cent go to the government. Twenty per cent is the minimum surplus now required of national banks and most take pride in increasing theirs beyond that. The prestige of the association would certainly be increased by allowing some small portion of the excess earnings to go into surplus until it is built up to a creditable figure.

The central bank will act as government fiscal agent and depository, removing forever the danger of a political appointee making political use of the millions of government deposits in numerous localities which likely have laid wholly untouched. And then I might have got to Wenatchee and I might not, and the distinguished commission member might and he might not. But assuming that we both got there, I would have been utterly unprepared to be a good listener. Why the first banker I asked some years ago to explain to me what a re-discount was could not do it, which illustrates how many terms, phrases and references must be used in so condensed a synopsis as can be delivered in one hour, and would be largely unintelligible to a man wholly unprepared. I would then have come away with a dry taste in the mouth, like a small boy wondering how the dessert got past him and gone without his getting any. I would have been somewhat chagrined of course and concealed it, and so would the others who went away with an equally profitless experience.

On a technical subject like this it would be exceedingly difficult to touch enough responsive chords among listeners such as I would have been, to arouse any great interest and enthusiasm. No, fellow bankers, we are not going to get strong in this faith without experiencing a good old fashioned Methodist conversion and knowing how and when we got it. If we can call a camp-meeting to meet at Wenatchee, with very little overhead preaching on this subject, and lots of testimony and experiences, from at least one man in every county in the state, telling how he got converted and what keeps him strong in the faith to-day, we will get some of the stiff necked procrastinators going, and beginning from the bottom up build up such a power of enthusiastic, intelligent sentiment on this question as never before illuminated, the united patriotic purpose of a united fraternity, and at the same time reflect the light for the feet of the electorate.

Washington—Public debt on June 1st was $1,303,556,397, less gold reserve of $150,000,000 and available cash balance of $86,477,946, making net debt $1,067,078,851 or decrease during May of $772,044.

BOND SALE

The City Treasurer of the City of Leon, Iowa, will receive bids up to eight o'clock Monday evening, June 19, 1911, on $25,000.00 Water Works Bonds. Said Bonds will be in denominations of $500.00 each, to bear 4½% annual interest, to run twenty years, with optional payments after ten years.

BIG HARRIS TRUST OFFERING

The Harris Trust and Savings Bank is offering $10,000,000 Louisville and Nashville railroad Atlantic, Knoxville and Cincinnati 4s, dated May 1, 1905, and running fifty years, part of an authorized issue of $50,000,000, of which $20,245,000 are outstanding. It is stated that $7,500,000 were subscribed for before the public offering at 93½. The bonds are a direct obligation on the main road, first mortgage on 200 miles, general mortgage on 630 miles, and subject to prior lien on 83 miles. Terminal properties are also covered.

REFORM BANKING SYSTEM

A new reform in the country's banking system planned by Comptroller Murray is outlined in the June circular of the National City Bank of New York. It is, in brief, the examination of all banks in clearing house cities under clearing house authority. Where the burden would not be too great this is to be done by an examiner employed by the clearing house. Elsewhere the national bank examiner is to make carbon copies of his report to the comptroller of the national banks, then to make independent examinations of the state banks and trust companies. Pay for this would come from the clearing houses, but would be less burdensome than by the first method.

EXTEND POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM

Washington—On July 1st the postal savings bank system will be extended to first class offices, or the larger cities of the country. By that date there will have been established one thousand postal savings depositories. They are now being put into operation on an average of fifty a week.

BUILDING OWNED BY THE BANK

MILWAUKEE

NEWS LETTER By Mortimer I. Stevens

WISCONSIN

Some little revival of trade has been noticeable during the past week, particularly in the manufacturing lines. In the iron and steel trade considerable interest is manifested in the eastern reports that various railroads would in the near future become heavy purchasers while the manufacturers of staples claim that jobbers are commencing to send in orders long delayed and that the prospects for fall and winter trade are better than they have appeared for some time in the past.

Locally, bank clearings show a healthy increase over the same period one year ago. At the banks there is about normal demand for loans with rates steady and collections reported fair.

The bond trade continues to show the same healthy signs which have prevailed for several weeks. In Milwaukee there is a fair and steady movement of the better grade of securities and out-in-state inquiries indicate a good trade to come from that direction.

That Guaranty Bill Bugaboo

It is a case of turn about in this state between the bankers and Senator Owen, the promoter of the state guaranty bill, with the senator no longer denying the fact that his fathering of the bill is purely a political move and the bankers using every honest effort to defeat a bill which they believe can only result in harm to the entire state banking system.

Not long ago it looked as though any definite action on the bill would be postponed for at least another two years but latest reports from Madison are to the effect that the senator has managed to slip one over on the bankers who are but poor politicians, at best. The senator, apparently abandoning hope of being able to secure the necessary vote in the senate to put his bill through has, according to authentic information, resorted to log rolling methods and is trading votes for his pet measure. Within a few days the bill in new form will be presented so that but majority vote is required to put it up to the people two years hence to decide whether or not the legislature shall pass a guaranty bill. In this form it will become a party slogan and will be extremely difficult to defeat if possible at all.

Another Fight over Depository Bill

Under the present state banking laws of Wisconsin the state banks cannot be named as depositories for postal savings funds and an effort is being made in the legislature to pass a bill known as the Crowell bill authorizing state banks to qualify as depositories of postal savings. The federal law requires state banks to put up certain securities to qualify as such depositories, which conflicts with our present state laws.

This bill is being opposed in the senate on the ground that it made the federal government a preferred creditor of a bank and would tend to lessen the security now afforded depositors of such a bank.

Banking Commissioner Increases Staff

Commissioner of Banking A. E. Kuolt has made six new appointments in his office in the way of reorganization under the provisions of the law recently passed by the legislature providing for more bank examiners and an enlarged clerical force.

The new appointments are: Thomas Herried, Madison, examiner; R. B. Ellis, Oconto, examiner; Maurice Morrissey, Delavan, examiner; Burne Pollock, Lancaster, building and loan inspector; T. M. Wild, Milwaukee, chief clerk; Miss Jennie Nelson, Madison, clerk. Another examiner and clerk are allowed but will not be appointed at present.

Meeting of Bankers at Rice Lake

Group One of the Wisconsin Bankers Association, held its annual meeting at Rice Lake on June 7th and was well attended by bankers from that part of the state though the Milwaukee delegation was unusually small due to the annual excursion of the Merchants and Manufacturers association in progress at the same time.

The program was extremely interesting, the chief speakers being George D. Bartlett, secretary of the association who spoke upon "Recent Bank Legislation," and Hon. W. A. Scott, of the University of Wisconsin, who chose as his subject "A Central Bank for the United States." The program in full was as follows:

Address of welcome on behalf of the city, Hon. T. A. Carron, mayor of Rice Lake; address of welcome on behalf of Rice Lake bankers, Hon. Sewall A. Peterson; response, W. A. Blackburn, cashier Lumbermans State Bank of Bruce; annual address by the president of the group, A. E. Bradford, Augusta; report of secretary and treasurer, Frank Pierce, Durand.

¶ This Bank, being at the logical center of Wisconsin banking activity, and having an exceptional list of State and Foreign correspondents, offers its services to conservative Banks with the assurance that such a connection will be of mutual advantage.

Baird Joins Wisconsin Trust Company

One of the latest additions to the splendidly organized force of the Wisconsin Trust Company is Robert W. Baird who is now associated with the bond department. Mr. Baird enjoys the reputation of being one of the foremost bond salesmen in Wisconsin and has the confidence of all with whom he has had business dealings in the past. For the five years prior to joining the Wisconsin Trust Company Mr. Baird represented the well known firm of A. B. Leach and Company in Wisconsin and is thoroughly familiar with local conditions as well as the requirements of the bond trade in this section of the country.

Edward A. Farmer Becomes Cashier

Edward A. Farmer, first assistant cashier of the German-American Bank of Milwaukee, has been appointed cashier to succeed C. F. P. Pullen, resigned. Mr. Pullen's resignation, given because of poor health, took effect on April 6th. Mr. Farmer has been acting since that time but the appointment was not made official until the final action of the board, which was unanimous. Mr. Farmer has been connected with the bank for eleven years.

Mr. Farmer's position will be filled by R. L. Stone, while L. E. Kilian was appointed second assistant cashier. Fred W. Niles was appointed manager of the Bay View branch of the bank succeeding Theobald Otjen, resigned. Fred C. Clifford was appointed assistant. W. H. Graebner, Milwaukee, and Louis Desert, Mesinee, were elected directors.

Prominent Banker Dies at Oshkosh

Joseph H. Porter, aged 85, prominent retired lumberman and banker, died recently at his home in Oshkosh after a brief illness. He was born in Maine and came to Oshkosh in 1854. For years he conducted a sawmill and went to the California goldfields in the early 50's prior to coming to Oshkosh.

Mr. Porter was a stockholder in the Wisconsin

National Bank of Milwaukee, a director in the Old National Bank of Oshkosh, president of the Berlin National Bank and a director in the Fond du Lac National Bank. He was also interested in a number of smaller banks throughout the state.

Another New Appleton Bank

Articles of incorporation for another state bank to be located in Appleton were recently filed and announcement is made that early next fall the Outagamie County Bank will open for business in that city. The capital of the new institution will be $50,000 and actual building operations for the new home will commence within a few weeks.

Banking Notes and Personals

Franklin Raab, auditor for the Marshall and Ilsley Bank of Milwaukee, has been seriously ill at his home for the past week, but is now reported on the road to recovery and will soon resume his duties at the bank.

Gardner P. Stickney, vice-president of the Wisconsin Trust Company, who for the past week has been enticing the fish from the cool waters of northern lakes, is once more at his desk.

John H. Thomas, for twenty-three years with the Old National Bank of Oshkosh has resigned his position as discount clerk to take up work in connection with the development of a large tract of land near Elkhart Lake.

W. J. Parkes, who has been connected with the Citizens National Bank of Green Bay for the past eighteen years has resigned in order to take a much needed rest to recuperate his health. He has been assistant cashier and teller for several years.

E. A. Curtis, president of the Citizens State Bank of Fond du Lac has leased the Griffin residence in that city and will immediately move his personal effects from Sycamore, Ill., his former residence.

Commissioner of Banking, A. E. Kuolt, has approved the articles of incorporation of the Farmers Savings Bank of Palmyra with a capital of $15,000. The incorporators are E. B. Heimstreet, W. H. Munger, R. Jones and others.

The Muscoda State Bank has completed its reorganization and the increase of $10,000 in stock was over subscribed. The following directors were elected: John N. Swingle, O. W. Fessel, Dr. C. R. Picjering, R. B. McIntyre and A. C. V. Elston.

There will be no segregation of bank deposits in Wisconsin for at least another two years. The bill providing for this, recently introduced at Madison, has been indefinitely postponed.

The contract for the new building to be erected by the State Bank of Oshkosh, Oshkosh, has been let at a cost of about $17,000. The structure will be of brick with stone front and will be 36x85 feet. The vault is to be built of reinforced concrete.

BANK CLEARINGS SHOW BUSINESS IS IMPROVING

Bank clearings reported for May are believed by many observers of the business situation to indicate that a distinct turn for the better has come. May was the first month during the past year to show an increase in the total clearings of all important cities of the United States as compared with the corresponding month of the previous year. Chicago's gain was 3.4 per cent and New York's 1.9 per cent, while the total for 144 cities gained 2.5 per cent. Out of the 144 cities 99 returned a heavier total than in May, 1910. The steady losses in previous months of 1911 cause an unfavorable comparison for the first five months of the year. The total for this period is 9 per cent under that of the corresponding time in 1910.

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, June 8.—St. Louis bankers report gradual, and apparently solid improvement in the demand for money. It is slow, none denies that, but by degrees the borrower is losing the position of vantage which he has enjoyed for so many months. The quotable range of interest rates has not changed this week, but more and more loans are being made toward the major end of it. Some large renewals and new business were reported by the larger nationals which will net better returns than has been the case for a long time. Chiefly the activity is noted in the country, and sharp reductions in Southwestern balances at this center have taken place since the first of the present month. Wheat cutting is general along the lower rim of the winter belt, and agricultural requirements are expected to augment from now on. The big talk put up by the interested bulls in the grain pit relative to extensive damage on account of hot, dry weather, is repudiated by the more conservative element of the trade. All concede a deterioration from the wonderful prospects two months ago, but withal there will be an enormous crop of winter wheat. The drought and heat have not wrought the havoc which the interested parties would have the public believe. The rains this week in the upper tier of the belt did good, and clear skies are just what is needed for harvesting operations. The government cotton report was much more optimistic than expected, and did much to restore confidence in the South and Southwest. Local borrowers are still borrowing extensively, but as has been the case for a long time are getting accommodations in the East. The outlook for fall trade is brighter right now than at any time since the last panic, and merchants in the big wholesale and jobbing district are making extensive preparations for meeting the demand, which they say is sure to materialize. Funds with leading banks continue plentiful, but no very vigorous campaign to augment loans is being pressed; the disposition being to hold off the present low rates, in preparation for the crop needs later on.

Postal Bank for St. Louis

Postmaster T. J. Akins has confirmed the report from Washington, D. C. that the government will establish a postal savings bank here within the next few weeks. The department says that need has been felt for such an institution in St. Louis earlier, but it was prevented establishing one because of lack of available funds. Mr. Akins says he is entirely prepared to handle the business, but thinks it probable the government will wait until the new postoffice at Eighteenth Street and Clark Avenue is completed. To illustrate the need of such a bank Postmaster Akins says that during October and November, 1910, money orders drawn on savings banks in other countries at this office amounted to $183,000. Nearly all this amount was sent out of the country by foreigners, who have no fear to place their money in a government savings bank. Much of this money would have been kept in this country had the federal banks been in operation. In addition to the bank designated for St. Louis, twelve other cities in Missouri will open savings banks about the same time. They are Cape Girardeau, Carrollton, Carthage, DeSoto, Hannibal, Lexington, Mexico, Moberly, Monett, St. Charles, Trenton and Bonne Terre.

Knotty Point at Issue

W. B. Sanford, cashier of the Holland Banking Company of Springfield, Mo., is technically in jail. A writ of commitment ordered by the county board of equalization, when the banker refused to answer questions regarding the balance of a depositor, was served upon him this week. By agreement Mr. Sanford will not be put in jail, owing to the warm weather, and he is released upon his personal recognizance. An application for a writ of habeas corpus will be filed in the supreme court of Missouri. Not only will the constitutionality of the sections covering the board's power be tested, but an opinion on "privileged communications" between banker and depositor will be requested. The outcome of the suit is being watched with interest by bankers throughout the state, especially in the smaller towns.

Stock Way Oversubscribed

George H. Burr and Company, bankers and brokers of St. Louis, have announced that the offering of $1,250,000 of 7 per cent cumulative stock of the Barnhart Brothers and Spindler Company, offered to investors last week, has been oversubscribed by several hundred thousand dollars.

Our correspondents are pleased with the care we take of their business at the St. Louis National Stock Yards, because it is thoughtful, not mechanical.

The St. Louis-Union Trust Company has been appointed receiver for the real estate holdings of E. G. Lewis in University City, the holding company being known as the University Heights Realty and Development Company. The order of United States Judge D. P. Dyer also carries an injunction against any disposition of the property. The sharp advance in the market price of shares of the St. Louis Union Trust Company was the feature of the St. Louis Stock Exchange last week. The price was bid up to $455, without bringing out any stock. The last previous sale of this stock was around $432. Big earnings and the generally strong condition of the institution are accountable for the strength of its shares.

Testimony in Kobusch Suit

Breckinridge Jones, president of the Mississippi Valley Trust Co., in his testimony before a special commissioner in the suit for $325,000 against the company, being brought by George J. Kobusch, stated that the sum sued for was not excessive interest, but just remuneration for extraordinary services done by the defendant in making loans to Kobusch. Mr. Jones testified that it was necessary to send officers to Philadelphia and elsewhere to investigate securities which Kobusch had put up as collateral for loans. Mr. Jones said that Kobusch had expressed himself frequently as satisfied with the service done and charge made for it, and it was only a short time before the suit was brought that he showed signs of being dissatisfied. "It is not a question of one man's word against another's," said Mr. Jones, "but we have papers which will show that the Mississippi Valley Trust Company more than earned every cent paid it, and that Mr. Kobusch got value received in services, for which he more than once in writing expressed his appreciation."

Ten Cents All That was Left

One dime, ten cents, was all that was found in a safe sent by the Farmers State Bank of Tulsa, Okla., to Plainfield, N. J. to be opened by the manufacturers who had built it. This was a disappointment as the steel receptacle was believed to contain between $30,000 and $40,000. A representative of the bank was present when the safe was opened to count the money and transfer it to a safe place. There are conflicting reports as to what happened to the safe. The combination would not work, and now the Oklahoma bank is trying to unravel the mystery. The dime was taken back to Tulsa.

The personality consists of stocks, $262,420; notes, $14,072; bonds, $9,092; cash, $8,623, life insurance, $5,000 and $300 in goods and chattels.

Want Some of Panama Bonds

Festus J. Wade, president of the Mercantile Trust Company and the Mercantile National, and D. R. Francis, of Francis Brother and Company, will submit bids to the government for part of the $50,000,000 of 3 per cent Panama Canal bonds. The award will be made at Washington, June 17th. Mr. Wade declined to state specifically what amount of the securities he desired for his institution. "Not more than $50,000,000," he remarked. The Francis house is organizing a syndicate, and will doubtless present the largest single bid in the West.

Missouri Financial Report

The balance in the Missouri state treasury on June 1st was $3,670,103, which is held as follows: In treasurer's vault, $20,493; Exchange Bank, Jefferson City, $182,258; First National, Jefferson City, $181,049; National Bank of Commerce, Kansas City, $178,906; German-American Bank, St. Louis, $298,733; and Mississippi Valley Trust, St. Louis, $2,808,662.

Commerce Gets Automobile

The National Bank of Commerce has added a new frill in the form of a 60-horse power automobile. This bank already owns a machine, but the first purchase is in the shape of an ambulance truck, and is used to carry gold and silver to the subtreasury and other banks. The new car is for social purposes. Visiting bankers, clients of the National Bank of Commerce, will be dashed around the city and county and given "large times" when they come to St. Louis to do business. The board of directors are unanimous in the belief that an automobile properly applied is a great promoter of good feeling and country depositors.

Missouri Bank Clerks Meet

Members of the Bank Clerks' Association of Missouri held their annual meeting recently. The business feature was preceded by a dinner and social gathering. G. L. Faulhaber presided. Twenty-two members were nominated, eleven of whom will be chosen as a board of directors to elect officers for the next year. The present officers are George M. Willing, president; Hugo Boehl, treasurer and Frank Falkenheiner, secretary. The association has 505 members. Albert Bond Lambert, of the St. Louis Aero Club, delivered his lecture on "Aviation."

Bond Market Continues Good

St. Louis brokerage houses and trust companies report a continued good market for bonds, and the volume of new listings placed within the last month has been large for this time of the year. It is announced that quite a number of financial institutions and brokerage firms will submit proposals for part of the $50,000,000 of Panama bonds, which the government will sell on June 17th. Francis, Brother and Company are the first to announce definitely the intention of buying a considerable part of the issue. They are organizing a syndicate to bid for the securities. As the bonds are in as low as $100 denominations, the plan is to get numerous subscribers for small amounts, so that the total bid will show up well when submitted.

Bruce D. Smith has been appointed assistant cashier and assistant secretary of the Northern Trust Company. He is a son of Byron L. Smith, president of the bank.

CENTRAL WEST LETTER

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

Omaha

A trolley line from Kansas City to St. Joseph and Excelsior Springs, Mo., to be known as the Clay County & St. Joseph Railroad, probably will be started this fall. Chauncey Eldridge of Tucker, Anthony & Company, bankers of Boston, has been in Kansas City for a week to give the final word on the financial end of the line. With Philip L. Saltonstall of the same firm he went over the route of the proposed line to Excelsior Springs but refuses to announce the final plans of his concern in the premises for a week. His firm has backed a number of interurban enterprises in Ohio and Indiana but this is the first project they have contemplated this far West. It is understood that this new line is the first of several about to be projected in the Kansas City territory. It is felt that the receivership of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company of this city which was appointed by the Federal Court here last week, will have no effect on the plans contemplated. Local financiers believe the present entanglement of the Metropolitan will not injure the credit of local securities in the East.

Financial Conditions Good

State Bank Commissioner J. N. Dolley of Kansas in discussing financial conditions said: "It is, of course, early in the season to fully estimate growing crops, but it can be stated that everything that is known to date is of a character extremely favorable. Our foreign trade continues to run very heavy in our favor. Our exports in the month of April were the largest in our history and exceeded imports $27,876,094. This means that we are accumulating vast credits abroad which our bankers can bring to this country upon demand whenever money rates advance sufficiently to allow the money to be used profitably on this side of the water. This vast reserve assures an easy money market for a long time to come. General business conditions are undoubtedly leading to a steady expansion of business and the placing of contracts for heavy lines of material and merchandise."

Mutual Admiration Dinner

The members of the Kansas City Bankers Club were told about the recent convention of Missouri and Kansas bankers, held in that city ten days ago, by Jerome Thralls, manager of the clearing house and secretary of the club, at a dinner given at the Hotel Baltimore. The dinner was a sort of mutual admiration session for all the men who had part in the convention's entertainment. Mr. Thralls was presented with a handsome valise, apropos of nothing except that he is believed to be a good clearing house manager.

Not Afraid of Robbers

By many it is contended that various articles of feminine attire when worn afford excellent safe keeping for valuables but it remained for a Oklahoma woman to demonstrate that when a bank is in the process of being held up by robbers her skirt was quite the proper hiding place of the institution's strong box. It developed during the course of the trial of two men for robbing the Cotton Exchange Bank of Crawford, Okla., last November made the mistake of doing so when Mrs. Henry L. Goode, wife of the cashier, was present. Mr. and Mrs. Goode slept in the building occupied by the bank. Before the curtains of the bank had been raised in the morning a depositor had placed $750 in the bank. A moment later a pair of regular dime novel robbers put in their appearance and demanded the cash in approved dime novel fashion. Mrs. Goode refused to raise her hands and smilingly told the robbers she was very comfortable and as the other men of the bank were being stood around at the behest of the visitors she kept up a running fire of pleasantries with the robbers, all the while hiding the aforementioned bank's strong box behind her skirts. After looting the cash drawer and helping themselves to such loose change as the customers present happened to have the robbers left under the raillery of Mrs. Goode, overlooking the "one best bet." One of the robbers was arrested in Canadian county, Texas, and another was run down by bloodhounds in Washita county, Okla. Mrs. Goode was the main witness for the state, the dime novel pair, Charles Koontz and R. F. Graham, being sentenced to forty years each in the penitentiary. From all of which might be drawn the moral that it pays to let the woman hide the money.

Banking Notes

The Kansas National Bank of Wichita, Kan., the oldest bank in the Arkansas Valley, last week doubled its capital stock to $400,000. The bank was founded in 1876. Its board of directors has contained many noted men of the valley for the last forty years.

Richard W. Walsh, son of John R. Walsh, now in the Federal prison at Leavenworth, visited his father last week. He was much disappointed over the refusal of the president to pardon his father. An effort is to be made, it is reported, to present the claims of the aged banker to the attorney-general for a parole beginning next August.

Upon his refusal to divulge information concerning the cash balances of certain depositors on June 1, 1910, W. B. Sanford, cashier of

The Texas banking department has made public a statement showing that the total deposits of the state and national banks in Texas for the period ending March 7th, is $162,523,708, or an average of $41.71 per capita.

W. B. Groves, president of the Groves National Bank of Hollis, Okla., has retired from active work and Claud Prather and J. D. Pennington will be in full charge.

The Eastern Oklahoma Trust Company, a new banking institution for Okemah, Okla., is being organized with a capital of $50,000. The board of directors will be J. J. Roland, C. N. Peters, Judge W. A. Huser and W. H. Dill.

An attempt was made by four masked men recently to rob the bank at Breckenridge, Okla., but was unsuccessful. In an effort to break into the bank building, they aroused citizens of the place who put them to flight.

W. A. SMITH DEAD

Nyack, N. Y., June 2.—William Alexander Smith, the oldest member of the New York Stock Exchange and president of that organization during the Civil War, is dead at his home here. He was born in Pottstown, Pa., in 1820, and came to New York in 1844. Mr. Smith was treasurer of the American Bible Society from 1848 to 1851. In December, 1904, he celebrated his 60th anniversary as a member of the stock exchange.

plaintiffs and Minnehaha county defendant. He did not deliver a formal address, but stated to the association for their information, and for any action they desired to take in reference thereto, the matters involved in this suit. Many members of the association were not acquainted with the purpose and present state of the litigation, although indirectly interested therein. The case arose out of the effort on the part of the state board of assessment and equalization to require bank stock to be assessed at a higher percentage of its true value than other classes of property. The talk was very interesting and Mr. Warren had an attentive audience.

The First State Bank, of Leedy, Okla., has been organized with a capital stock of $10,000. The directors are: F. W. Crow and P. E. Crow of Elk City, E. W. Buchanan of Texmo, Okla.

NEW CLEARING HOUSE DEPOSITORY READY

Practically all arrangements for the opening of the new clearing house association depository, in the Central Trust vault room, have been completed.

It will do away with the necessity of bank messengers carrying large sums of money through the streets, and clearing house certificates will be issued to them when they clear. The certificates are worthless except to the banks to which they are issued.

It is expected that in a few months approximately $30,000,000 will be in the clearing house vaults. On Wednesday tellers from the First National and Fort Dearborn National began counting $5,000,000, each, in currency in the vaults of the Central Trust Company, which will be deposited when counted.

ILLINOIS PRIVATE BANK INSOLVENT

Charges of collusion and hints of fraud are contained in an involuntary bankruptcy petition filed Wednesday in the United States district court by four creditors of P. F. McCarthy, a private banker at Thirty-ninth and South State streets.

The bill alleges that McCarthy has assets of $75,000 and liabilities of $100,000. The creditors state that he has "pretended" that his bank was recently robbed of $40,000 and that he has permitted several creditors to get an advantage in reaching his assets by permitting them to obtain judgments and by making assignments.

Burns Busy

The serious aspect (serious for the sluggers) which the union labor war has taken on in Chicago is accounted for in part by the fact that the Architects' Association of Chicago has employed the W. J. Burns National Detective Association to run down the criminals who are preventing the erection of eighty millions of buildings by carrying on jurisdictional strife and a slugging warfare. No intention in this to rob Inspector Nicholas Hunt of his part of the glory. Burns and Hunt are big enough to work together.

Among the new postal banks recently established in the Central West are: Mena, Ark., Lindsborg, Kan., Clovis, N. M., Lawton, Okla., and Holdrege, Neb.

Editorial Comment

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR

Tribute is being paid to the Chicago system of self-examined banks by every big city in the country. Those which have not adopted it will, or they must fall behind in public esteem and in the perfection of their system. All Chicago knows the quiet, modest gentleman who discovered the need and planned the necessity. The same banker planned and brought to perfection the useful Clearing House Section of the American Bankers Association.

It is with real pleasure that these credits are being given in the public daily press, as will be seen by the following editorial, in full, from the Chicago Record Herald of this city:

The progressive comptroller of the currency, Mr. Murray, is endeavoring to establish in all reserve cities the "Chicago system" of self-examination by the banks under the authority and rules of the respective clearing houses.

St. Louis was the first of the other central reserve cities to recognize the value of the system and to follow the example of Chicago. New York has been rather slow in adding itself to the roll of honor, but it has just done so. Of the reserve cities several have adopted the plan in the interest of safe and sound banking, and the comptroller is urging the rest to do likewise.

The Chicago idea of co-operating with re-enforcing and anticipating government examination no longer needs theoretical advocacy. That banks should be above suspicion, and that the position and methods of each are the concern of all associated in clearing houses, must be regarded as axiomatic.

To William T. Fenton, vice-president of the National Bank of the Republic of Chicago, is due the credit of suggesting a clearing house examiner to supplement the work of the national and state examinations of banks.

Every banker in the country cannot duplicate these "finds" by Mr. Fenton nor can all have his quality of modesty but all can try. Building up the figures of one's own bank isn't all there is to do. Increasing the general safety and facilities for correct banking is as much the work of a lay banker as if he were in congress. Constructive work distinguishes the real individual from the mere "cog" in the machinery of banking. Let us have more Fentons, Grants, Piersons and their like. Reforms have not all been accomplished because of what Fenton has done for clearing houses; what Grant has done for transits or what Pierson has done for bills of lading. Other names might easily be mentioned but these will serve to point the moral that there always is work to do and that, though often deferred, recognition for real services must always come.

ESCHEAT OF UNCLAIMED DEPOSITS LEGAL

The United States supreme court finally has decided that the Massachusetts law, providing that unclaimed deposits after 20 years shall be turned over to the state, is valid. Several attempts to pass such a bill in Illinois have failed because those who opposed it assailed it as unconstitutional. Many good and bad bills have been put out of the running upon this same assumption. The banks fought the bill before the legislature in Massachusetts, and afterwards, in this state and United States courts. It was claimed, during the fight, that more than half the New England bank buildings had been paid for by unclaimed deposits. Only last week the United States supreme court handed down an opinion "that an unclaimed savings bank deposit was like any other property within the state which had no known legal or living owner through the abandonment or disappearance of the owner."

A banker who was quite active three or four years ago in fighting the bill then up for passage in Springfield, gives it as his opinion that it now will come up again. The law is in Illinois that when the owner of real or personal property dies intestate, leaving no heirs or representatives, his property shall escheat to the county in which it is situated. The constitutional question having been determined those who favor it can see no reason why the next general assembly should not pass a law turning over to the state or to the counties in which the banks are situated unclaimed savings deposits.

The Massachusetts law provides that in case a claimant should show up after the 20 year period, the state shall at once reimburse the bank. It is a fair question and should be decided without allowing private interests to be consulted. Unclaimed deposits are no more the property of the banks than unclaimed real estate is the property of the railroads or other corporations. Big bankers are always fair and just.

CITY COUNCIL AFTER PRIVATE BANKS

Out of patience with the Illinois legislature and with private banking as she is done in Chicago, a Chicago alderman has introduced an ordinance "to supervise, license and regulate private banks." There have been almost weekly failures among the 210 listed and innumerable unlisted private banks in the city. The totals are not large in each instance but the losses usually are "total," and come on the poor and upon those who trust in "banks."

Referring to the McCarthy and Eidman

"bank" failures, two of the most recent, and to the aldermanic movement the Chicago Evening Post says:

The truth is that it is the business of the State of Illinois to put a stop to the present lack of control over the use of the word "bank." As B. F. Harris of Champaign so vividly pointed out at the last convention of the Illinois Bankers Association, this state stands almost alone among the great banking commonwealths in its neglect of the private banks. The reason is clear. All remedial legislation has been opposed by the downstate private bankers, whose political power is easily able to prevent action at Springfield. Harsh things have been said about this opposition. But as a matter of fact it probably comes less from self-interest than from a lack of proper understanding by the country bankers about the abuses of the private bank in Chicago. Illinois, outside of the city, has about the best line of private banks that any one of the midwestern states possesses. These institutions are honorable, sound and responsive to the needs of their communities. They are satisfied to get along without state regulation, and their customers are willing to have them do without it. Therefore they are naturally disinclined to see anything of the kind get on the statute books.

Perhaps the agitation in the Chicago city council will help some. At least the city could refuse to license a pawn broker who called his joint a "bank" as 90 per cent of them do. These pawn-shop "banks" real-estate "banks," loan-shark "banks" and robber "banks" long have disgraced the city and the state. They are a menace, and if the honest private bankers were as wise as they are honest they would lead the fight for supervision and inspection, which would put an end to the crooked ones.

Private bankers have long controlled the state association and have been enabled to "kill" all remedial legislation. Perhaps this all may be changed with the adoption of a new constitution at the Springfield convention which would put a stop to private bankers, as such, controlling all committees, and from holding the executive offices alternate years—the very years the legislature is in session. The editor of the Post should read the present Illinois Bankers Association constitution and he would see that there is less of sentiment in the situation than he had supposed. Probably the city council has no power to regulate banking as such, but it can do a lot of good, by talking about it. Rascals hate publicity. Alderman Britten will be doing a public service if he puts up a stiff fight.

TRAVELED OUT TOGETHER

Geo. M. Reynolds, president Continental and Commercial National, W. G. Edens, assistant secretary Central Trust, and W. C. Foster, tax agent for the Chicago and Northwestern R. R. in the states of North and South Dakota, traveled together from Chicago to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, for the Sioux Falls convention. Mr. Foster was one of the early bank commissioners of South Dakota and enjoys a wide acquaintance among North and South Dakota bankers.

True to its Name—

The founders of the Northwestern National Bank exercised foresight in selecting its title.

The growth of this bank has been continuous and sturdy, and today the scope of its activity is "northwestern" in the full sense of the term.

With correspondents throughout all the territory from Chicago to the Pacific, and in Canada, exceptional facilities are offered for handling the business of the Great Northwest.

Georgia Convention

Tybee Island, Ga., June 9.—The Georgia bankers have just concluded a two days' session of their annual convention at this place. The organization is twenty years old and the attendance is considered a record breaker for the association. President W. W. Osborne of Savannah called the convention to order at 9:30 yesterday morning, and Bishop B. J. Keily of Savannah delivered the address of welcome, to which W. H. Searoy of Cairo responded. President Osborne then delivered his annual address, which was very interesting and well received by the delegates and visitors. Treasurer E. C. Smith of Griffin, Secretary L. P. Hillyer of Macon, and J. W. Hefernan, chairman of the council, delivered their annual reports. Congressman Vreeland of New Jersey delivered his celebrated address on the work of the monetary commission, and gave in detail the benefits which the country is to derive from the organization of a national reserve association. Two other addresses by A. M. Soule, president of the State College of Agriculture, and by Benjamin F. Perry, assistant-treasurer of Georgia, concluded the morning session.

The afternoon session of Thursday was called at 4 p. m. and the program event was the annual debate of the Savannah Chapter of the American Institute of Banking. The question was whether or not state banks should be allowed the same advantages as national banks if the national reserve association plan is adopted. There was much interest in the discussion and the large audience listened patiently to the well prepared papers.

The Friday morning session had three splendid addresses, one by J. E. Dunson of La Grange, one by Fred E. Farnsworth, the popular general secretary of the American Bankers Association of New York, and one by Professor J. Laurence Laughlin, dean of the College of Political Economy at the University of Chicago. The Savannah bankers entertained their visitors very delightfully on a boat ride down the river and at a dinner given by Mills B. Lane.

Assistant State Treasurer Speaks

Ben. F. Perry, assistant state treasurer, received quite an ovation when he spoke. He said in part:

In the fall of 1891, when the annual examination of state banks began under state supervision through the office of the state treasurer, there were only 57 chartered state banks, but the records now show more than 570. If the same ratio of increase is continued as for the first five months of this year, the number will have reached no less than 600 before January, 1912.

The great interest manifest in, and the increase of state banks, was considered of such vital importance to the upbuilding of the state and the welfare of the people, that, in 1907, the banking laws were amended in certain particulars, and the banking bureau, created in the state treasury department with the state treasurer as state bank examiner, for the better supervision of the chartered state banks and the proper administration of the laws governing them, with semiannual instead of annual examinations. Since then, however, several attempts have been made to get a bill through the legislature seeking to further amend and reform at least certain sections, suggested by the inefficiency of the present law to meet the requirements for safe, conservative banking, notwithstanding the faithful efforts of the Georgia Bankers Association and other bankers in their individual capacity, but as yet nothing has been accomplished. Therefore, the Banking Bureau finds much of the law of force under the Code of 1895, and the several amendments thereto, still effective, although in some few instances obsolete and not applicable to present conditions. In a few instances the amended laws confuse rather than simplify, and the department is oftentimes in doubt in its construction and application. Some of its changes and amendments most desired have been called to the attention of each succeeding legislature by the present and former treasurers, and also the Georgia Bankers Association, but each year the suggestions and recommendations have been passed on to the next body of the state's guardians to likewise consign by non-action to oblivion.

How the Law Works

Notwithstanding the present imperfect and inadequate laws governing and regulating Georgia banks, the banking bureau has done excellent service in its supervision of the state banks and by reason of the soundness of the financial institutions, careful management, and their co-operation to put into effect the suggestions of the department, not a single state bank has been placed in the hands of a receiver since 1907. The same is true of national banks in Georgia. In its administration of the laws, the banking bureau has endeavored to be advisory, helpful and constructive, by rendering every assistance possible and in offering timely advice and suggestions, based on actual experience in banking and observation in the conduct of banks generally, rather than to be rigid, arbitrary and dictatorial in enforcing the statute laws. The department has found, too, that the men in charge of our state banks are honest, and, in the main, not only willing to, but gladly co-operate in all that tends to the best interests of the individual bank and the

In concluding Mr. Perry made many recommendations for new banking legislation intended to bring Georgia up to modern, advanced standards such as the new law of Alabama.

ITALIAN BANKER'S VIEW OF AMERICAN BANKING

Robert E. Lang, manager of the Credito Italiano, one of the largest banks in Italy, who has returned home after a four months' tour of this country, while here spoke very highly of American banking, industry and agriculture that came within his observation during his stay in the United States. He was particularly impressed by the ceaseless activity of Americans and the huge scale upon which business was conducted here.

As to the opportunities for American finance in Italy, Mr. Lang declared that there was a limited demand for our stocks and bonds. They were not quoted on the Exchange and bankers seldom received orders for the purchase of American securities. It was difficult to introduce our stocks and bonds in Italy because all foreign securities were subject to a tax of two per cent.

"The Credito Italiano," he said, "handles a great many American cotton bills. While some of the bank's customers have suffered substantial losses through the issuance of fraudulent bills by Knight-Yancey and Steele-Miller, at the present time little interest is manifested abroad in proposed bills of lading reforms. The Italian banks were safeguarded by their customers who purchase the cotton from American shippers."

James B. McDougal, chief bank examiner for the Chicago clearing house, on his return from New York, announced his decision not to accept the offer of a similar position recently made by the New York clearing house. Mr. McDougal has special interests in Chicago which he would have to sacrifice if he went to New York.

Charles A. Spiegel, treasurer of the Germantown Saving Fund Society and a prominent business man of Germantown (Pa.), was killed on his way to a ball game. The carriage in which he was riding was struck by a trolley car.

ENORMOUS EXPENDITURE

Spokane.—More than $17,500,000 will be expended on municipal and railroad work and building operations in Spokane during the next 12 months, and of this amount the city's share is approximately $6,000,000. The Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound, the Northern Pacific and the third division of the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation companies have plans for work costing $6,500,000 and architects and contractors estimate that fully $5,000,000 will be invested in new buildings this year. Municipal work in progress or confirmed amounts to $1,721,280 to date, and, in addition, there is $3,936,280 for bridges and buildings as follows: City hall, $665,000; South Central high school, $450,000; Monroe street bridge, $450,000; Datsah bridge, $425,000; reservoir, $150,000; fire stations, $40,000; isolation hospital, $25,000. The grade separation plans in preparation by the engineering department of the Northern Pacific Railway Company involve an expenditure of $3,750,000. It is expected this matter will be decided within the next 60 days. The Milwaukee and Harriman systems announce that about $3,000,000 will be invested in union station and terminal facilities in and near this city.

DAVID R. FORGAN TALKS TO MILWAUKEEANS

Milwaukee bankers were much interested in the talk made by David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, before the Milwaukee Credit Men's Association, recently. According to Mr. Forgan the financial and commercial interests of the country are contending with a combination of the poorest banking system in the world with the best banks in the world.

"There is no need of added precautions to protect depositors, for they are secure," he said, "but the business interests of the United States can never become powerful when the country is subject to periodic financial panics which cause our banks to suspend payment and so cripple business."

Taking up another phase of the situation, he said: "The present law of reserves is absurd. How can a bank keep a reserve fund against deposits if it is not allowed to use it? What use is twenty-five per cent of a bank's deposits in its vaults?"

The proposed national reserve commission for America he says will have the confidence of the people and the banks and avoid panics. The commission as explained by Mr. Forgan will have a financial backing of $100,000,000. It will have its headquarters in Washington, with fifteen branches throughout the country. The directorate of the commission will consist of bankers' national government officials, and outside business men, all with equal balance of power, forty-five members in all.

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the American Institute of Banking in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Systematic Education and Universal Membership

GROUP FIVE, ILLINOIS, AT PONTIAC

The big Corn Belt group of the Illinois bankers met at Pontiac Thursday and Friday of this week and took on all the airs of a state convention. It was a big meeting and a good program. On Thursday evening there was a reception at the Elks' club rooms and at 10 A. M. on Friday an automobile ride to the state reformatory. The business meeting was held at 11 A. M. and at one the delegates sat down to a fine luncheon at the the Phoenix Hotel. So far it was all play and no work but at 2:30 P. M. there was a big open meeting for bankers, land owners, farmers, public instructors and others interested in soil preservation and vocational education. S. A. Rathbun welcomed the guests of the city and E. D. Durham, the Aurora Borealis of Onarga, did the flowery in the way of a response. C. E. Hook, chairman of the group, made an interesting talk and B. B. Castle got off a long pent-up oration on county clearings.

At the big open meeting the chief speakers were farmers W. G. Edens of Chicago and Dr. W. E. Taylor. General discussion followed. Really Edens has been a farmer. He was about 18 and the term was 3 months. The Historical Society has the record.

GROUP SEVEN, AT SHELBYVILLE

Group Seven, Illinois, will meet at Shelbyville, next Wednesday. The speakers are August Blum, Chicago, B. F. Harris, Champaign, Wm. G. Edens, and R. L. Crampton of Chicago. Mr. Blum will talk on modern banking, Harris on vocational education and Edens will do the rest. Mayor Bivins will welcome the delegates and W. E. Turner of Taylorville will respond. W. S. Middlesworth is president and T. A. Scott, secretary.

GROUP TEN, ILLINOIS

Murphysboro, Ill., June 2.—Members of Group Ten of the Illinois Bankers Association met in this city to-day. Henry S. Henchen of the Chicago State Bank delivered the address. After the business session, the visitors were shown the industries of Murphysboro. The following officers were elected:

Members of the executive council of the state association for one year, Robert R. Ward of Benton; vice-presidents of the state association, Willard Wall of Murphysboro and T. F. McCartney of Metropolis.

Group officers: Chairman, J. S. Aisthorpe of Cairo; vice-chairman, Stewart L. Crebs of Carmi; secretary, E. B. Jackson of Marion; treasurer, D. W. Whittenberg of Vienna.

BANK EXAMINERS

Washington, June 5.—National and State bank examiners from Northern and South-eastern Ohio, West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania, meet at Pittsburgh July 10th. Papers will be read by Charles R. Dodge, Department of Banks and Banking of Ohio, on "Assets Good and Bad"; A. B. Camp, national bank examiner of Ohio, "Bonding Employees. Should This be Optional or Obligatory?" George De Camp, national bank examiner of Ohio, "Some Standards for Examination"; D. C. Hanna, national bank examiner for Ohio, "The Bank Officer, His Duties and Responsibilities."

ROCHESTER CHAPTER

The annual meeting and election of officers of the Rochester Chapter of the American Institute of Banking was held on Friday evening, May 26th, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: president, John Henderson of the Lincoln National; vice-president, Edward P. Vollertsen of the Fidelity Trust Company; secretary, C. F. Rothmeyer of the Lincoln National; and treasurer, William D. Niven of the Rochester Savings Bank. The executive committee is composed of Fred Nutschler of the National Bank of Commerce; D. M. Rose of the Union Trust Company; Leon Benham of the Alliance Bank; and George H. Walters of the Traders National.

The members of the Rochester Chapter feel that this section of the state is entitled to a representative on the executive council and have recommended and endorsed the candidacy of Frank Thomas of the Alliance Bank for this important office. Mr. Thomas organized this chapter, has twice served as its president and having always been very much interested in the educational work of the institute, he is peculiarly fitted for a member of the executive council to which we feel sure he will be elected when the convention meets here in September.

All the various convention committees are well organized and no efforts will be spared to make this convention the most interesting the institute has ever held. We hope that every chapter in the country will send a full delegation. Delegates coming to Rochester may feel assured of such a cordial welcome as no other city can give. Full program and other items of interest will be announced later.

WILL PAY DUTIES WITH BANK CHECK

St. Paul.—According to a recent law of Congress that after June 1st payment of customs may be made by certified check instead of by cash as has been the requirement for many years. The bank clearings of St. Paul, in common with those of every port of entry in the United States will be on the increase. The receipts at the local custom house are about $1,250,000 a year, so that the total business flowing through the local banks ought to show up larger.

For over a quarter of a century, from time to time, this provision for facilitating the business of collecting the national resources has been under discussion, but the reasons for continuing the requirement that they be paid with money, and not many years ago with gold, have been more obvious than the reasons why business should not be incumbered with the inconvenient method of payment, so that it has, until now, been impossible to get the law adopted.

The maintenance of the customs fund by the local banks at the subtreasury has tied up about a million dollars in cash day after day, with the accompaniment of red tape in drawing duplicate checks and receipts against it and its repayment to the banks every night.

Under the new arrangement, effective on the first of June, this fund will be unnecessary, and probably a third of a billion dollars in certified checks will be added to the year's clearings of the subtreasury. These checks will be accepted by the collectors of the ports, who will issue receipts and can release goods without delay. They will go on, in batches, to the subtreasury, where the United States treasury receipts to cover all will be issued. Next day the settlement with the banks will be made at the clearing house. It will free upward of $2,000,000 a day to general circulation.

TRANSIT NUMBERS BEING SELECTED

The universal numerical system devised by the committee of transit managers has been accepted by the executive council of the American Bankers Association.

Arrangements have been made with the Rand-McNally Company of Chicago, says the June letter issued by the Northwestern National of Minneapolis, to assign numbers to all the banks in the country and to publish a directory containing the designation of each bank so numbered.

The general nature of the system is as follows: A prefix number is provided for each reserve city, which is used in connection with the clearing house numbers of the banks in that city. These reserve city numbers are from 1 to 49 inclusive. Other cities are designated by a progressive series of numbers based upon census returns, with a prefix for each state. The state numbers are from 50 to 99 inclusive. The reserve cities do not have the state prefix, so that the next largest city in each state may be covered by the state prefix followed by the clearing house numbers of the banks in that city. This makes it possible to use the clearing house numbers in nearly one hundred cities. The object of the system is to permit the entire preparation of transit letters upon an adding machine, eliminating the use of written descriptions altogether. It will be a great time and money saver for the banks of the country if this system meets with the approval and adoption which it undoubtedly merits.

GROUP FIVE, INDIANA

Group Five, Indiana, will meet at La Fayette, June 15th. D. D. Jacobs of that city will lead in discussing the National Reserve Association plan; Prof. Skinner of Purdue University will give a boost to the back-to-the-soil effort and C. L. Goodbar of Crawfordsville will talk on bank advertising. J. L. Randel, of Greencastle, is chairman of the group and H. F. Bucklen of Brazil, is secretary.

BURTON OPPOSES ALDRICH PLAN

Strong objection to the Aldrich central bank plan was made by Senator Theodore O. Burton, of Ohio, in a speech on currency legislation before Cincinnati bankers recently.

Burton is a member of the monetary commission which is considering the Aldrich plan. He expressed doubt as to the sufficiency of the paid up capital of $50,000,000 of the central bank and also whether the deposits of the government and of banks which would not draw interest would afford sufficient working capital in times of panics. He disapproved the plan for taking over government bonds held by persons.

Burton also objected to the importation of a tax on circulating notes in the manner prescribed by Aldrich. He favored participation by government officials in the management of the central bank.

Special Banking Services

THIS bank makes a specialty of handling inactive reserve accounts for banks and bankers, and of supplying carefully selected bonds for investment or circulation purposes. During the past twenty-nine years its officers and directors selected and purchased, after careful investigations, over one thousand million dollars of bonds, which have been sold to a constantly growing list of conservative clients. In buying bonds of this institution the investor secures the benefit of the extensive experience and trained judgment gained through the selection of this large amount of safe investment. The special character of our business permits of liberal interest terms on inactive or reserve accounts of banks, bankers, corporations, firms and individuals.

For the first time in the history of the state a bank of which a woman is the cashier was certified as a depository of state funds by Treasurer Creamer. When the certificates of deposit were returned after the funds were awarded the one which came from the Hardin County Bank Company of Forest, Ohio, was signed by Ella N. Meyer as cashier. The incident aroused the interest of State Treasurer Creamer and he looked up the records to find that no woman's name has ever appeared in that connection before. The bank was awarded $10,000 of state money at 3.60 per cent.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the New First National Bank of Columbus the regular semiannual dividend of 5 per cent was declared, and in addition the board declared an extra dividend of 5 per cent on the capital stock out of the earnings of the last six months, making 10 per cent in all.

The reports showed the last six months to have been the most prosperous in the history of the bank. Last year, in addition to the regular annual dividend of 10 per cent, the board declared two extra dividends of 2½ per cent each, making 15 per cent for the year. The dividends, payable to-morrow, are the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth semiannual distributions made to stockholders, and these dividends aggregate $654,000, which have been paid on the $500,000 capital of the institution.

The Houston Bank of South Charleston is now at home in its new quarters and has one of the finest banking rooms in the smaller towns of the state. The bank building has been entirely remodeled and handsomely decorated. At the opening over 1,300 visitors were at the bank and inspected the new rooms, safety deposit vaults and other new banking appliances. Mr. Houston was the recipient of many messages of congratulation from financial concerns all over the country, as well as a number of handsome floral tributes.

Dr. Richard E. Jones, aged 77 years, president of the First National of Lima, one of the oldest bankers in the state, died Sunday, April 30th at his residence at Gomer, Allen county, after an illness of two weeks.

The directors of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank and the First National Bank, both of Cadiz, O., have voted to merge the institutions. They are capitalized at $50,000 each and have combined deposits of $600,000.

The Colonial Savings Bank and Trust Company of Fremont will increase its capital from $75,000 to $100,000. The company has deposits of $600,000, surplus and undivided profits of $4,000, and was organized in 1904.

The Brighton German Bank of Cincinnati has closed a deal for property adjoining the rear of its present bank building at Harrison and Colerain avenues, and when the leases expire, in about two years, will tear down the structures just acquired and expand its banking quarters to cover the whole property. At present it is necessary to have the savings department in the basement of the present bank building. This will be located on the ground floor when the new building is erected.

For the first time in the history of the service, it is said, the deficit in the postoffice department has been entirely wiped out, and $1,000,000 surplus for the current fiscal year, ending June 30th, next, is in the treasury to the department's credit.

The Farmers' & Mechanics' National Bank of Cadiz, Ohio, has been placed in voluntary liquidation.

CAPITAL ONE MILLION DOLLARS

Trust Companies

At Group Six, Indiana bankers meeting, at Connorsville, E. B. Thomas, of Rushville, delivered a very effective address on the subject of trust companies in which he said in part:

Trust companies in Indiana are comparatively new institutions. They are not freak creations but have sprung into being and multiplied in number, either because there was a pre-existing need for them, or because their promoters and organizers saw an opportunity to utilize their functions with profit to themselves. We submit that the record of these corporations in our own state as well as elsewhere, justifies the statement that they are fitting themselves into our complicated commercial life and have become a necessity to our future industrial growth.

It is not intended that this paper shall be a defense of trust companies, for they need no defense, except their own splendid record.

The trust company supplements the bank, and whether it should be permitted to perform functions of the bank itself, is a question that has caused active and interested discussion for several years. Sufficient history has been made, and ample data is available to determine clearly the duties and functions these institutions may be permitted with safety to perform.

To-day about 1,800 trust companies, having resources aggregating five billions of wealth, are doing business in the United States. One hundred eleven of these with resources of more than seventy-eight million dollars are found in our own state. With these figures in mind it is apparent that any action, legislative or otherwise, affecting their work, if not their life, may be reflected in other financial institutions and may result in a general impairment of public confidence in all moneyed concerns.

Two departments of trust companies as they are operated under the laws of this state, should have special mention, namely the trust and savings. In my opinion such corporations can render no greater service to the state than to acquaint the public with those two departments. The advantages of a trust company as trustee are many and apparent. In such capacity it has every desirable quality that an individual has and many he can not have. The company does not die, it is invariably on hand during business hours and can be consulted at all times, its charges are light and its work efficient, it is absolutely confidential and it makes a permanent record of its acts which are available whenever required.

The reports to the auditor of state show that on March 31st of this year the trust companies of Indiana, held in savings accounts 33 million dollars, and this total indicates that the small depositor has not been slow to respond to the appeal of this department. In urging the savings department, we may render an invaluable service to the community, and at the same time serve well the corporation we represent.

The other functions of these corporations are manifold. They act in a great variety of capacities, and in different states and communities maintain departments suited to the needs of the locality. Perhaps no department of trust company business has created more agitation, among those directly connected with the financial institutions of our state, than that department handling checking accounts. Should this practice be permitted, and if not why not? Recent experiences before our state legislature were not unlike the evidence so often given in our courts of justice, by expert witnesses. Those engaged in strictly commercial banking were united in the opinion that the practice is a dangerous one, while those representing trust companies were equally positive that the custom is altogether wholesome. This question should be regarded from at least two viewpoints, namely, that of the depositor and that of the receiving company. There should be no confusion here. We have already stated it as our opinion that the trust department covers the greatest responsibility of a trust company, and we suggest that if the trust companies, in their management, have the ability and integrity to guard and manage successfully 25 billions of trust business, then the same integrity and ability may guarantee safety to the depositors of checking accounts. Our conclusion is that from the standpoint of the depositor and taking interest only into consideration, a checking account need not be a dangerous thing, nor will his interests be jeopardized by the maintenance of other legitimate departments.

The question presents some complications, when viewed from the standpoint of the banker. All are not agreed here. There can be no argument that if trust companies are to do a commercial business then they should be required to keep a reserve against that business. There seems to be no question but what the trust companies have been and are to-day keeping a reserve equal to that of other banks. By referring to the report of March 31st last to the state auditor, it will be seen that deposits of all kinds held by trust companies amounted to 62 million dollars, and the reserve was more than 20 per cent of that sum, and if we deduct the time and trust deposits then the reserve exceeded 27 per cent.

The reason for the statement that checking accounts may endanger the success of the other departments, or that the operation of the other departments may decrease the security of the checking accounts, is not apparent. We can not see where the banking department weakens the trust company.

Trust companies make no claim to superior intelligence or integrity in the administration of their business, but they believe they are meeting some of the needs and requirements of many communities of our state.

With this superficial review, may we not indulge the hope that the trust companies of Indiana may continue to grow in usefulness and that in conjunction with all other banking institutions we may increase in strength and favor.

MACVEAGH TO TESTIFY

Washington, D. C., June 5.—The house committee on expenditures in the treasury department decided to-day to seek from Secretary MacVeagh light on the change in the policy of the department in the classification of creosote, transferring it from the dutiable to the non-dutiable list. Mr. MacVeagh, who was absent from Washington when the committee investigated the reversal of the order of Assistant Secretary Andrew, directing the collection of a 20 per cent duty on creosote, will be asked by Representative Cox of Indiana, chairman of the committee, to testify this week.

Washington estimates average bids for new Panama bonds will run from 100½ to 103.

Evening Session

The evening session was opened with an address by J. A. Latta of Minneapolis, followed by a round table, in charge of J. Burr Ludlow of Rushmore. Topics for discussion: "Banks and Bankers; East and West," led by C. T. Tupper of Spokane, Wash.; "Why I Am not a City Banker," W. G. Malchow of Wilder, and "What Feature of the Group Program Appeals to You?" T. E. Nash of Pipestone. "Legal Question Box," was in charge of Judge Lorin Cray of Mankato, followed by reports of committees, election of officers and a banquet. A social dance closed the convention.

Bank Advertising

Craig B. Hazlewood of Chicago, before the first district bankers at Winona, June 6th, on "Bank Advertising," said that in banking the advertiser must show value and also reasons for confidence in his advertising. He recommended use of the newspapers and advised plenty of white space. He said that program and directory advertising is useless.

Another speaker was former Congressman J. A. Tawney of Winona who said again that he is out of politics. He discussed the duties of bankers and other business men.

Banking Miscellany

Bankers of the fourth judicial district in North Dakota organized June 7th and 8th at Lisbon. The organization will affiliate with the North Dakota Bankers Association. The convention was preceded by a banquet at the Bradford hotel. Arrangements were in charge of H. S. Grover of Lisbon.

The Batavian National of La Crosse, Wis., was lowest bidder for $70,000 water and $15,000 school bonds, which means that it bid highest or par and accrued interest at 4 per cent. Other bidders charged the city $1,640 to $3,230, cutting the bonds under par.

E. L. Somerville has bought a seat in the Minneapolis Stock Exchange. He bought from A. A. Kane. The membership is limited to twenty and all seats are taken as follows: Charles E. Lewis Company, Piper, Johnson & Case, Stevens, Chapman & Company, Minnesota Loan & Trust Company, Minneapolis Trust Company, George B. Lane, Union Investment Company, Wells & Dickey Company, Walter A. Thomas Company, Fred W. Dean and H. L. McSchooler.

E. W. Decker, vice-president of the Northwestern National, is at his office again after a siege with mastoiditis. The affection has been popular and many wear the badge of the order, a strip of adhesive plaster behind the ear holding in place an antiseptic bandage.

W. H. Lee, president of the Hennepin County Savings Bank, has returned to Minneapolis after two months on Long Island. He found a better financial feeling in the East.

S. H. Bezoier of the Security National, P. J. Leeman of the First National of Minneapolis and R. E. Macgregor of the Northwestern National attended the group meetings at Winona and New Ulm, Minn.

Under the new state law state banks in cities of the first class must have $50,000 capital. The Commercial State, the new bank of St. Paul at Seven Corners, come under this head. W. E. Dixon, J. Q. Mackintosh and J. E. Thoreen are moving spirits in the enterprise.

The Twin Cities are to have postal banks in the near future. This move is unexpected. Postmaster E. Yanish of St. Paul says:

"I think the establishment of postal savings banks is a good thing. It will not affect the business of the banks. I have no doubt that a great deal of money is being hidden away, which will be brought out by the establishment of government depositories.

"Postal savings banks, if established in the cities of Minnesota, would be patronized by a class of people that now does little or no business with the banks."

The convention committee of the Grand Forks Commercial Club has decided to ask for the convention of the North Dakota Bankers Association for 1912. The meeting this year is to be at Fargo the later part of June. The meeting was held four years ago in Grand Forks.

Secretary C. R. Frost of the Minnesota Bankers Association will be a speaker at the Iowa bankers convention June 15th and 16th at Mason City.

ALASKA'S OUTPUT OF PRECIOUS METALS

In 1880 gold was produced in Alaska to the value of $20,000. In 1909 the amount mined was valued at more than $20,000,000. In 1888 silver was first produced in Alaska, to the value of $2,181; in 1909 the value was $76,934. In 1902 copper was first produced, to the value of $41,400; in 1909 its value reached $536,211.

DEMAND FOR BONDS HEAVY

Washington, June 6.—The rapid increase in the number of postal savings banks has had a marked effect on the demand for the several classes of bonds which are acceptable by the federal government for the deposit with banks of postal savings funds. According to the postal authorities the demand has been felt largely in Panama, Porto Rico and Hawaiian issues. Under the regulations, United States government bonds, bonds of the District of Columbia, Porto Rico and the Philippine islands are acceptable as a security for the safety and prompt payment on demand of the postal savings deposits, at par.

The Hawaiian bonds, together with the bonds of any state, are acceptable only at 90 per cent of their market value, that market value not to be considered as exceeding par. City, town and municipal bonds, under certain qualifications, are acceptable at 75 per cent of their market value, not exceeding par.

It is predicted at the postoffice department that this demand for bonds of the classes named will steadily increase, for it is the department's policy to extend the postal bank system just as rapidly as possible. In a short time one of these banks will be established in one of the large cities in the country and Washington has been tentatively selected, because the postoffice department will have an excellent opportunity to watch it here. If the experiment of postal banks in the large cities succeeds, then banks will quickly be opened in all the cities of the country. As a matter of fact, the department believes that it will receive its largest deposits from the banks of the large cities.

MORE TRUST COMPANIES ADMITTED

At a meeting of the Clearing House Association (New York) held June 5th the following trust companies were admitted to membership: Title Guaranty & Trust, Mercantile Trust, Lawyers' Title Insurance & Trust, Standard Trust, People's Trust Company of Brooklyn, New York Trust, Franklin Trust Company of Brooklyn and Lincoln Trust. This makes sixteen trust companies that have been fully admitted to membership in the clearing house.

Action on the other institutions which have made application for membership in the Clearing House will be taken in the near future.

A. Barton Hepburn, president of the Clearing House, stated after the meeting that the association had practically settled the question as to the man who is to head the proposed examination system, although his name would be withheld for the present. It is understood that the position will go to a New York man.

FIFTY NEW POSTALS LOCATED

Washington, D. C., June 7.—Fifty additional postal savings depositories were designated yesterday, to commence business July 3d. Among the fifty new offices are Beardstown, Duquoin, Fulton and Murphysboro, Ill.; Brazil and Vincennes, Ind.; Emmetsburg and Mount Pleasant, Iowa; Charlevoix, Holland and St. Joseph, Mich.; Cameron and Chillicothe, Mo., and Rice Lake, Wis.

Spokane, June 6.—Five per cent money again is available at several of the larger banks in Spokane, and it is predicted that the total amount of mortgage loans placed this year will eclipse all previous records. Heads of national banks report they have ample funds to handle almost any kind of commercial transaction and that more capital will be at the disposal of their customers from month to month. The rate heretofore was from 7 to 8 per cent, with occasional loans at 5½ and 6 per cent on income property in the city.

The principal causes assigned for the reduction in rates is the influx of money from insurance corporations and eastern investors, the increases in dividends from mines in the Spokane country, notably the Coeur d'Alenes in northern Idaho, and Republic camp, in northeastern Washington, the extension and improvement work on transcontinental railroads and the prospects for the largest and most profitable crops yet harvested in the Inland Empire. The banks in Spokane, and, in fact, throughout the district, have more money in their vaults to-day than ever before, and, as the outlook is encouraging, the bankers are liberal in making loans.

The mortgage department of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company, which recently made a loan $30,000 to D. O. Fotheringham, owner of the Omo building, for five years at 5½ per cent, probably was the first to reduce the rate to 5 per cent, and other big institutions immediately adopted a similar policy.

Scarcity of Good Income Property

Good income property in the business district of Spokane practically is off the market, according to A. R. Arbuckle. "One of the best indications," he added, "is that it is almost impossible to buy the choice properties. I have been looking for a piece of property worth anywhere from $100,000 to $250,000, but so far have been unable to find any owners who are ready to sell. They seem to have unbounded faith in the future of Spokane, and as a rule prefer to buy additional property rather than sell. Their properties are paying a good income, and advancing rapidly in value. While this is one of the strongest proofs of permanence and strength, it makes it more difficult to-day for an investor from other sections of the country to pick up what might be regarded as snaps in the choice portions of Spokane's business district."

Forger Arrested

F. E. Leighton, formerly of Jackson, Mich., known in Spokane as F. E. Claven, city salesman for an exchange company, was arrested here on May 31st, charged in a warrant sworn out by Charles M. Spinning, a bank cashier at Jackson, with forging a bill of lading for a car of hay, consigned to Newark, N. J., on June 24, 1910, and turning the paper in as security on a loan. L. F. Strobel, chief of the police at Jackson, says in a 1,400-word telegram to the local police department, that Leighton's peculations amount to more than $10,000. It is declared in the telegram that he disappeared from Jackson last August after flooding the district with forged bills of lading. He posed as a hay dealer in Michigan. The arrest was made by Detective Chester Edwards, who recognized the man from a photograph supplied by the Jackson police. Detective D. F. Tobin is on the way to Spokane to take the prisoner back to Jackson. It is given out he will not oppose extradition.

Banking Notes

G. W. Seal, formerly treasurer of Stevens county, has become president of the Bank of Chewelah, Wash., recently organized with a capital of $15,000. Charles Adams is vice-president and State Senator A. W. Anderson is cashier. A modern building will be erected this summer.

Postmaster Dunn of Wallace, Idaho, has received advices that a postal savings bank will be opened there in a short time. This means that many thousands of dollars now being sent to Europe by foreign-born miners in the Coeur d'Alene mines, will remain in Wallace. The people of Wallace did not petition for this bank, but Mr. Dunn recommended it after ascertaining the amount of money that leaves the district annually for safe keeping in foreign banks.

B. F. O'Neil, president of the State Bank of Commerce, which recently closed its doors at Wallace, Idaho, says in a private letter that the institution will pay depositors dollar for dollar. Reports from Wallace are that the bank will be reopened.

W. H. G. Phipps, accountant in the Bank of Montreal in Spokane, has been transferred to Nelson, B. C., and is succeeded here by G. A. Lafferty, formerly of Rossland, B. C.

W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National Bank; Thomas H. Brewer, president of the Fidelity National Bank and W. A. Clarke of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company, will attend the Oregon State Bankers convention at Portland, June 9th and 10th, and the Idaho State Bankers convention at Boise, June 12th to 14th.

R. Insinger, manager of the Northwestern & Pacific Hypotheek Bank, has been elected president of the Spokane County Good Roads Association, succeeding F. H. Mason, who resigned because of the press of his private business.

George H. Allen of New York, educational director of the American Institute of Banking and editor of the Banking Bulletin of the American Bankers Journal, was entertained by the Spokane chapter on June 3d.

Seattle

M. B. Leary and his associates, who plan to open a bank in the secondary business district near the corner of Broadway and Thomas street, have purchased the state bank charter held by Barto & Sons. This step will make it unnecessary for Mr. Leary to finance a $100,000 institution such as the state banking law requires in cities the size of Seattle. Barto & Sons obtained their charter before the present banking law was placed on the statute books.

Bank Stock in Demand

Since the Seattle stock exchange was organized about January 1st local bank stocks have been actively bid for on the floor of the exchange. Of late there has been more demand for stock in various local financial institutions and prices on several issues have been run up to record high levels.

The opinion of leading lawyers in Boston is that the American Tobacco decision is even much more favorable to business than the Standard Oil decision. It in fact goes a step further in the mild corrective and offers the assistance of the lower court to point out the way to a legal reorganization out of the constituent properties.

San Francisco

George E. Allen of New York, director of the educational department of the American Institute of Banking, at present on a tour of the West, expects to be in San Francisco about the middle of June and will be given a reception there by the San Francisco Chapter.

A case of considerable interest to bankers was decided here by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, in which the drawer of a check is forced to make good to the bank that cashed it. The case was on appeal from Portland, Ore., the United States District Court at that place having decided in favor of the bank that cashed the check. The record shows that the Amalgamated Sugar Company drew a check on its banker at Ogden for $4,000 and cashed it at the Portland bank. When presented for payment at the Farmers and Traders' National at Ogden, Utah, payment was refused on the ground that the drawer of the check had ordered payment stopped. Thereupon the Portland bank instituted an action against the drawer and recovered judgment for the full amount of the check, plus interest and costs.

The case was complicated by the fact that a few days after the Ogden bank had refused to honor the check that bank went into insolvency.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment of the lower court. In the course of the opinion it was remarked that some one other than the innocent payer must stand the loss, and the sugar company was selected as the victim, because it was through its own act that the Ogden bank, while still able to pay the check, refused to do so.

Michael Korlath, formerly president and manager of a bank at Windsor and Scalp Level, Pa., was arrested here May 29th on a charge of embezzlement. The arrest was made on information that Korlath embezzled $20,000 from the bank he conducted.

Korlath denied that he had been guilty of appropriating the funds of the bank.

GREENEBAUMS ORGANIZE AS TRUST COMPANY

The state auditor of Illinois has granted to James E., Henry E., and Moses E. Greenebaum a permit to organize the Greenebaum Trust Company of Chicago, capital $1,500,000, to take over the business of Greenebaum Sons, private bankers. A member of the present firm says organization will be completed during the month and the institution will begin operating under the state charter early in July. There will be no public offering of the stock.

The company was originally capitalized at $400,000. The stock was fully subscribed and one-half of it was paid up. The stockholders, in accepting the 100 per cent stock dividend, are turning it over to pay up the unpaid half of the original capital stock of $400,000.

NEW A. B. A. MEMBER BANKS

Following is a list of members joining the American Bankers Association for week beginning Wednesday, May 24, 1911, and ending Tuesday, May 30, 1911, both inclusive:

California—Ocean Park, Merchants Commercial & Savings Bank.

Florida—Jacksonville, C. L. Bagwell & Company.

Kansas—Burlington, Farmers National Bank.

Louisiana—New Orleans, New Hibernia National Bank.

Minnesota—Rushmore, Rushmore State Bank.

Des Moines, June 8.—The official program for the state convention of the Iowa Bankers Association was issued this week by Secretary Hall of the I. B. A. The program is the same as published in THE CHICAGO BANKER last week except that the name of Prof. Cyril Hopkins of the University of Illinois has been added to the program for Friday forenoon. Prof. Hopkins will speak on the subject "Iowa's Greatest Bank—Her Soil." Senator Kenyon was forced to decline the invitation extended to him because of engagements at Washington. Arrangements for the big meeting are progressing finely and there seems no room to doubt that the convention will be a success in every way. Des Moines bankers will be there strong.

Des Moines Banks Prosperous

The call issued by Auditor Bleakly for the business as shown on May 29th found Des Moines institutions prosperous. Reports to the auditor indicate that practically every state and savings banks in the city made a splendid gain as contrasted with the deposits shown at the date of the preceding call, February 8th. The People's Savings shows a gain of $168,807.34, which is the largest reported by any of the city institutions. It is thought that the reports from all over the state will show good increases as the crop prospects are first class and a general air of prosperity pervades the state.

Strange Receptacles for Deposits

Two instances of using strange places for depositories were reported in Iowa last week. At Stanhope, an implement man was surprised to find $800 in currency hidden in a gasoline engine which he had started to clean out. Five hundred dollars were in the cylinder head. Heirs of John Keelen of West Liberty, after his death, discovered $1,500 hidden away in boxes and tin cans scattered about the house.

Neat Piece of Bunco Work

Two men, believed to be smooth forgers, have been arrested in Missouri where they were working a neat bunco game similar to the scheme by which they defrauded a customer of the Malvern National at Malvern, Iowa, out of $500. The pair approached the customer of the bank with a book. They told him they were preparing to buy some Dakota land that he owned. He was asked to sign his name in the book so that they might use the signature in investigating the land. Of course, the customer signed his name. Later on the signature was found to be on a check on the Malvern National and it was cashed at Sioux City. It appears that the two gentlemen have a book with double pages so that the signer was not aware of what he was signing but supposed he was putting his name on a blank page. The Malvern man who was thus defrauded was quite old.

Not Harbors for Yeggs

Sioux City police officers are somewhat offended at a statement made by William B. Hughes who told the Nebraska bankers that Sioux City and Omaha are harbors for yeggs. Chief of Police Richards at Sioux City was highly indignant at the charge. He asserted that the statement might have applied two years ago. He said that the best evidence that there are few yeggmen in Sioux City is that there are few Pinkertons there looking for them.

Charles Shuler

Charles Shuler has been elected president of the Iowa National at Davenport succeeding Julius Burmeister whose resignation was announced a fortnight ago. Mr. Shuler has been a director of the institution since 1907. He is a leading Davenport business man and was formerly largely interested in Iowa and Illinois coal interests. It is understood that he has now sold this property in Illinois.

More Postal Savings Banks

Iowa will soon be overrun with postal savings banks at the rate they are being established. Within the past week, the post office department announces new institutions at Sheldon, Oelwein, Spencer and Oskaloosa. In the meantime the bank at Decorah continues to attract little attention. That at Centerville is doing better but could hardly be called a "howling success."

Bank in Hands of Receiver

The Security Bank at Wesley, Iowa, a private institution, has been turned over to a receiver and has closed its doors. The institution has been putting its money into North Dakota lands. It has not been able to turn its holdings and to protect its depositors. The owners of the bank say they will be able to realize at least 75 cents on the dollar for its creditors. George B. Hall was president of the institution which was founded in 1893. Louis H. Rasmussen was cashier. On January 1st, the institution was capitalized for $25,000 with surplus $2,300, deposits $162,000 and resources $189,000.

Last Group Meeting

The last group meeting has been held for this year. As a rule they have been better attended this year than ever before. The programs have also been good. The trend of discussion at the various sessions indicates that the Iowa bankers are in favor of the plans of the monetary commission and will so go on record when the state convention is held at Mason City.

Banking Notes

The state treasury realized $3,034.76 as interest on the state funds from the banks of Des Moines during the month of May. The largest amount ever received before for a single month was $1,500.

The State Bank of Ellsworth has renewed its articles and will continue for twenty years more.

The Albia State has filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state. The capital stock is $25,000. The president is Palmer Trimble, vice-president, Joseph Strasburger, cashier, D. W. Bates.

Most of the banks of Des Moines ended their fiscal year May 31st. In practically every instance an 8 per cent dividend was declared. Much was added to the surplus.

Roger Leavitt, of the Cedar Falls National one of the best known bankers in Iowa, is recovering from a protracted illness. He will take a trip to the Northwest accompanied by President H. S. Gilkey.

The Union Savings at Davenport announces a meeting on June 26th at which a vote will be taken upon the increase of the capital stock from $100,000 to $150,000. It is regarded as probable that the action will be taken to meet the growing demands of the institution.

The Woodbine Savings has filed renewal of its incorporation articles. The capital stock is $30,000.

Aubrey Reynolds, teller in the Iowa National Bank, had a narrow escape from injury when his automobile collided with that of John Kavanaugh. Both machines were damaged.

Word has reached Des Moines of the merger of the People's Savings at Titonka with the First National. Details are lacking here.

The inventory of the estate of the late James Watt, president of the German Savings Bank of Des Moines, has been filed. It shows that the deceased owned 260 shares of stock in the German Savings, 12 shares in the Farmers Savings at Carlisle, Iowa; 10 shares in the Norwalk Savings at Norwalk, Iowa; one-fifth interest in the Bevington Bank at Bevington. These holdings were in addition to numerous business holdings and several valuable horses.

The Farmers Savings of Bernard has filed articles. The capital stock is $10,000. The incorporators are W. R. Fleming, R. E. Curoe, David Donavan, Joseph Pfah, N. J. Nolan, D. C. Shields.

The New Numerical Transit System was approved by the American Bankers Association Executive Council, May 3rd.

THE entire force of 338 Burroughs men will demonstrate this system during the summer, beginning June 20th, when the new Official Numerical - Alphabetical Directory of Banks will be issued.

We want to show you how the system works. It is bound soon to be the universal transit system of American banks. We want to show you how the new cuts down the work of writing remittance letters at least one-third—and how the same machine handles every other kind of figure work in a bank, saving at least one-third the time and assuring infallible accuracy.

May we explain the new system? May we show you the new Transit Machine? Neither will in any way cause you expense or the slightest obligation.

We are now arranging the salesmen's itinerary for demonstrations. Requests will come fast. Your prompt request will secure an early date for demonstration. Write today.

STRENGTHEN BANKING LAW

Subject only to appeal to a board of state officers, the state superintendent of banks is given power to prevent the starting of new banks in Ohio by the Kennedy bill, which is now a law. If satisfied that the character and fitness of the stockholders are not such as to command the confidence of the community or that public convenience and advantage will not be promoted, he will refuse to grant the stockholders a certificate. They may appeal to the governor, attorney-general and bank superintendent, whose decision it to be final.

The superintendent's control of state banks is tightened. The bank must obtain his approval of the reserve depository and he may compel the marking down on the bank's books of the value of securities in which capital, surplus and deposits are invested. He may exchange information as to condition of banks with the United States comptroller of the currency and banking department of other states. Ten per cent of capital stock must be paid in before organizing and 50 per cent on each share, not in the aggregate as at the present, before beginning business.

CHICAGO STOCK EXCHANGE ELECTS TOWNSEND

The governing committee will meet to-morrow for the filling out of the other committee places.

The depository stock of the Chicago elevated roads was admitted to the unlisted department.

CONVENTION AT TYBEE

able fame by his unrelenting warfare against the re-charter of the Second Bank of the United States but I cannot find by diligent search that he ever gave utterance to any expression which can be construed as opposition to a plan whereby the government itself assumed the duty of issuing and distributing currency to its people, thereby facilitating the transfer from citizen to citizen of the product of farm and factory.

In Mr. Jackson's veto message of July 10, 1832, he makes it plain that his antagonism to re-chartering the Bank of the United States was because of the fact that that institution was a privately owned corporation enjoying—as he says—"an exclusive privilege of banking under the authority of the government and a monopoly of its favor and support and as a necessary consequence almost a monopoly of foreign and domestic exchange."

In his paper read to the cabinet on September 18, 1833, being his reasons justifying the removal of public deposits from the Bank of the United States, he makes it plain that his entire opposition to re-chartering the Second Bank of the United States was based upon the fact that the bank was a privately owned institution to which congress for an insignificant bonus had unwisely granted a monopoly of banking privileges and a monopoly of the issuance of authorized national currency.

In his first annual message delivered December 8, 1829, to be found in the Messages of the Presidents, vol. 2, page 462, Mr. Jackson uses this language:

"The charter of the Bank of the United States expires in 1836, and its stockholders will most probably apply for a renewal of their privileges. In order to avoid the evils resulting from precipitancy in a measure involving such important principles and such deep pecuniary interests, I feel that I cannot, in justice to the parties interested, too soon present it to the deliberate consideration of the legislature and the people. Both the constitutionality and the expediency of the law creating this bank are well questioned by a large portion of our fellow-citizens, and it must be admitted by all that it has failed in the great end of establishing a uniform and sound currency.

"Under the circumstances, if such an institution is deemed essential to the fiscal operations of the government, I submit to the wisdom of the legislature whether a national one, founded upon the credit of the government and its revenues, might not be devised which would avoid all constitutional difficulties and at the same time secure all the advantages to the government and country that were expected to result from the present bank."

Again in his annual message of the following year delivered December 6, 1830, found in the Messages of the Presidents, vol. 2, page 529, Mr. Jackson uses this language:

"The importance of the principles involved in the inquiry whether it will be proper to re-charter the Bank of the United States requires that I should again call the attention of congress to the subject. Nothing has occurred to lessen in any degree the dangers which many of our citizens apprehend from that institution as at present organized. In the spirit of improvement and compromise which distinguishes our country and its institutions it becomes us to inquire whether it be not possible to secure the advantages afforded by the present bank through the agency of a bank of the United States so modified in its principles and structure as to obviate constitutional and other objections.

"It is thought practicable to organize such a bank with the necessary officers as a branch of the treasury department, based on the public and individual deposits, without power to make loans or purchase property, which shall remit the funds of the government, and the expense of which may be paid, if thought advisable, by allowing its officers to sell bills of exchange to private individuals at a moderate premium. Not being a corporate body, having no stockholders, debtors, or property, and but few officers, it would not be obnoxious to the constitutional objections which are urged against the present bank; and having no means to operate on the hopes, fears, or interests of large masses of the community, it would be shorn of the influence which makes the bank formidable."

We will thus see that a central bank owned and operated by the people of the United States is Mr. Jackson's idea of the solution of the currency problem. A privately owned bank having a monopoly of creating and distributing national currency was in Mr. Jackson's mind a surrender of governmental functions not to be tolerated.

Those who oppose the idea of a central bank are dominated by the fear that the management of such an institution will ultimately fall in the hands of a few, who will use it corruptly for their own aggrandizement to the detriment of the people. These fears may be realized in any privately owned central bank monopoly. Such unhappy condition is less probable in a central institution owned and operated by the people in the same manner as other branches of government. In the latter instance, if corruption invade the management of the bank the chosen representatives of the people can remedy the wrong by summary dismissals. Such domination adverse to the people's interest can remain permanent only when

ABOVE is a view of the vast train shed at the new C. & N.-W. $25,000,000 Chicago terminal station. It occupies the second floor, and spreads over many city blocks, the streets and alleys being vaulted over. No other view shows the size and capacity of the new station like the above. The main building is a four-story structure of the early Italian Renaissance style of architecture, with a lofty Doric portico at the Madison Street entrance, supported on a colonnade of six granite columns, each seven feet in diameter at the base and 61 feet high. Immediately back of this colonnade, entered by three great arches, is a vaulted vestibule, 132 feet wide, 22 feet deep and 40 feet high. At each end of this vestibule are broad granite stairways to the main waiting room on the track level floor. Similar vestibules of simpler architectural treatment give entrance from Canal and Clinton Streets. These vestibules lead directly to a large public space, 200 feet by 92 feet, around which are arranged in the most convenient manner, the ticket office, baggage room, lunch room, news stand, telegraph offices, parcel check room, etc. From the center of this public space the grand stairway leads to the concourse of the main waiting room on the track floor. The main waiting room, which is the principal architectural feature of the station, is treated as a great Roman atrium, with a barrel vault roof. The pilasters and entire order up to the spring of the vault are a dull finished light-pink Tennessee marble. The columns standing free are of Greek Cippolino marble, whose delicate green hue harmonizes perfectly with the greenish bronze of the metal work framing the glass between the pilasters. The vault is of ornamental tile construction with richly ornamented ribs of terra-cotta of a color to harmonize with the marble of the walls. This great waiting room is directly lighted by two semi-elliptical windows, 60 feet in diameter, at either end of the vault and ten semi-circular lunettes piercing the vault five feet on each side. It is also arranged to be lighted artificially by reflected light. Arranged conveniently around this main waiting room are the dining room, women's room, smoking room, barber shop, etc. The exterior walls of the building are of gray Maine granite and are continuous with the enclosing walls of the train shed, which are of mottled gray brick, with granite trimmings. The train shed walls rise to a height slightly greater than the roof of the train shed, which gives the entire station the external appearance of one mammoth building.

Some of these features are the Self-Correcting Keyboard—that corrects automatically when the right key is pressed—and the Non-add key that adds without printing.

It is the only machine that is perfectly visible at every operation, showing totals and printing, in the same field of vision.

A glance gives you the number as it prints and the total up to that point. In construction the WALE'S is superior to all others.

the great body of the people themselves are corrupt. Such condition would mean anarchy and politically speaking the end of all things. Beyond a universal cataclysm no man, be he ever so wise, ever undertakes to provide. To trust the people to see to the proper performance of every necessary governmental function is both Jeffersonian and Jacksonian in principle.

HUGE COTTON CROP

Thirty-five million acres under cotton is a powerful augury for the 1911 crop. No such acreage was ever before planted—the figure is 1,634,000 acres better than the high record of 1906. Not only so, but the condition has started off most encouragingly. The government gives it as 87.8 per cent, a figure only once exceeded at this season. The Cotton Exchange did not become demonstrative over the report, as it had pitched its expectations very high. The stock market, however, accepted the statement as calculated to strengthen the purpose of those who are planning a bull campaign.

Nearly one billion dollars in new securities have been issued in the United States during the current year, an increase of $75,000,000 over last year. The railroad output reached the huge figure of $719,000,000, as contrasted with only $564,700,000 during the first five months of 1910. The industrial total of $273,000,000 shows a decrease of $79,000,000.

The Farmers' State of Delhi, Minn. has been licensed to do business with $10,000 capital. A. O. Gimmetad is president and A. R. Pierson is cashier.

Pittsburgh

At a meeting of the stockholders of the People's Trust Company, Southside, recently, the following directors were elected: Wm. Ruske, John Seiferth, Peter J. Keeling, Gustav Wilde, Joseph F. Ploeger, A. H. Sunshine, Simon Bornscheuer, Wm. Henning and Alois Winter, Mr. Seiferth being a new member. Harry F. Elgenn was elected secretary of the board.

Pittsburgh Banks Take Bonds

It was reported this week that three Pittsburgh banking institutions had joined in the underwriting of the $10,000,000 Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. bonds, sold to the First Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago. The Pittsburgh Trust Co. bought $700,000, the Safe Deposit and Trust Company $500,000 and the Keystone National $200,000, making $1,400,000 taken by Pittsburgh. It is said the original syndicate paid 99½ for the bonds, is selling them to institutions at 100½ and is holding them for investors at 102½, which price will be maintained for three months, it is stated.

President William Price of the Diamond National Bank and the Diamond Savings Bank and one of the best known of the true self-made men of Pittsburgh was honored this week by Gov. Tener, in being named as one of the members of the new board of inspectors for the Western Penitentiary. This action has pleased the friends of Mr. Price, who believe that no better selection could be made by reason of his wide experience, his thorough good judgment and his clean record. Mr. Price has been manufacturer, merchant, and banker.

THE CITY IS GETTING WISE

The street car companies must deposit the 8 per cent of their gross receipts provided for in the ordinance for renewals in a separate fund in a bank, so that the interest may accrue to the fund, according to an agreement reached yesterday between the city and company officials.

BANKER WAIVES HEARING

Wellsville, Ohio, June 5.—Thomas H. Silver, president of the Silver Banking Company, that failed a week ago, and who surrendered to the Wellsville police yesterday, waived a preliminary hearing in court to-day and was bound over under bond of $2,500 to await the action by the grand jury. Silver is charged with accepting deposits at the bank after he knew that it was insolvent. He says that he will assist the receiver in adjusting affairs, and asserts that the failure is not as bad as has been reported, claiming that the deposits were less than $100,000.

Sentence of Joseph G. Robin, on the petition of District-Attorney Whitman, has gone over to October 9th. Robin came up before Justice Seabury Thursday. The district-attorney stated that the prisoner had given testimony of great benefit to the state in pending cases. Robin was recommitted to the Tombs.

public good. A good, stiff punch, with a liberal reserve of the same kind on call, is the best answer for the slanderer.

NATIONAL CITY BANK circular for June is optimistic and gives hope. It says: "People everywhere are benefiting from the year of wholesome restraint which has helped to fortify conditions in all parts of the United States. There is not the same extravagance of living as there was a year ago. By exercising both public and private economies the position of the whole country has been rendered materially stronger."

BANKERS will be interested in the National City view on money conditions. The letter says: "The very large purchases of short term notes by many banks suggests a rather interesting problem about the future of the money market. There is no such fixed market for short term notes as there is for recognized railroad bonds or other long term securities. For that reason it would seem to be wise for the banks to consider the advantage of confining future investments of this character rather largely to bonds having a broad and settled market in distinction from some of the short term notes where the investment return is larger, but the chances of easy convertibility is much less certain."

MRS. NELLIE JEANETTE FREELAND announces the marriage of her daughter, Harriet, to Virgil Worth Moore at Chicago on June 1st. Miss Freeland for a number of years was employed as a stenographer in the Royal Trust Company Bank, and when the business of that institution was absorbed by the Central Trust, she continued in their service. Cards announce that the Moores will be at home after July 1st at Thorntown, Indiana.

S. B. CHAPIN AND COMPANY is distributing a valuable letter on the cotton acreage of the United States. It may be had on application.

CITIZENS BANK of Storm Lake, Iowa, conducted by Schaller and Son, will be converted July 1st to the Citizens National with a capital of $75,000. The Schallers, father and son, believe the community can be served better by an incorporated institution.

THIS will be a popular move and is complying with the public feeling in Iowa, that all banks should be under supervision and inspection. Schaller and Company is an honestly conducted private bank and stands high in the county, but will have a much higher career as a national with fixed capital and published statements.

PERHAPS that Iowa population hasn't decreased after all. The assessor of one township reports "19 births where only 10 had been reported." So cheer up!

WE are getting ready to have one (large, dark) on E. J. Curtin, if the Iowa bankers have the good sense to elect him president at Mason City. It would be a small reward for the work he has done for the association.

THE bond market seems to be on the road to a complete recovery.

EDWIN L. WAGNER, president of the National Produce Bank, sailed May 6th for Europe, to be gone ten weeks. Ralph N. Ballou, cashier, will be executive in charge during Mr. Wagner's absence, which is some compliment.

THE plans for the new Continental and Commercial building are the most elaborate ever seen in Chicago. One architect has spent eighteen to twenty thousand dollars in drawings, models, lighting displays and effects, and the end is not yet. It is a liberal education in modern building arts just to see them.

ONE architect has his offices cleared of every thing in the line of furniture and the walls draped with tapestries and rugs the better to bring out the plan and wash drawings. Some of the models are marvels and show the effects in lighting by the various light court designs. It is a valuable prize to the profession.

WE understand that Chief Examiner McDougal of the Chicago Clearing House has decided that he will remain here, rather than to go to the New York position, which was offered to him. A lot of people will be glad to know of this.

R. L. RINAMAN of St. Louis who had some of his innards gouged out by a surgeon is back on the job again feeling "quite tolerable." His many friends will be pleased to know that he is out of all danger and quite happy about it.

NEW ORLEANS CLEARING HOUSE wants to change the date of the A. B. A. convention from November 13th, to November 20th, one week later. This will depend upon the consent, of course, of Secretary Farnsworth for the A. B. A. The Colonel is going down to New Orleans next week when the matter will be decided definitely.

CHICAGO is to have a postal bank real soon and the Daily News, a pioneer in the movement, is quite well pleased over it. Chicago will be the first of the large cities to be so honored.

THE D. N. believes that "the only objectors to the postal bank should be men who desire to get the use of a large amount of money merely by putting the word 'bank' on their office windows. Irresponsible 'bankers' of this sort have found their victims largely among the poor, to whom the security of the postal bank ought to prove a blessing."

YES, and by the way, they are the same who kick on bank supervision. Not because supervision is dishonest or postal banking is wrong, either.

"SILVER JUBILEE," and printed in silver on gray-blue cover, on the Mason City program, ought to make a hit with the members. Shows, too, that P. W. H. is up to the situation.

THREE bankers were held by the Mayor on Tuesday. They were not arrested, but they were kept on the job as members of the police pension board by Mayor Harrison to whom they offered their resignations. The bankers are Joseph E. Otis, John J. Mitchell and Oscar G. Foreman.

ORRIN N. CARTER, of Chicago, has been made chief justice of the Illinois supreme court, by his fellow judges. This is a high honor and all Chicagoans know Judge Carter, long time county judge for Cook county, deserves it and will give dignified service.

RUMORS are about divided as to whether D. R. Lewis or Wm A. Heath will be elected to succeed the late John V. Clarke as president of the Hibernian. Lewis now is its vice-president, a position which Mr. Heath held before being elected president of the Live Stock Exchange National. Mr Heath was in no sense a candidate.

AMONG the Chicago bankers who took ship for the South Dakota meeting were James G. Wakefield, W. G. Edens, Wm. A. Heath and G. M. Reynolds. Mr. Reynolds is very much in earnest in his work for the National Reserve Association and Mr. Edens, also, was on the S. D. program.

NORTHWESTERN NATIONAL in its June letter covering home conditions says, "The money market in the Twin Cities remains practically unchanged, there being considerable activity in the way of small trades, but matters of greater importance naturally are being held in abeyance, pending more definite knowledge as to the returns to be expected from the crop."

TO MEET AT LOUISVILLE

Washington.—National Bank Examiner Percy H. Johnson, chairman of the district including Southwestern Ohio, Southern Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee examiners which will meet in Louisville July 3d, has sent to the comptroller the program of the meeting, which will be followed by a general discussion by national and state bank examiners in the district. Much interest attaches to the meeting and bankers from all over the country will be in attendance.

A paper on "Assets, Good and Bad," will be read by Charles R. Dodge, chief examiner of the state of Ohio.

The Hon. Ben L. Bruner, secretary of state, Frankfort, Ky., will speak on the "Startling Revelations in State Banks, Showing the Need of Supervision in Kentucky."

Papers will also be read by Samuel L. McCune, national bank examiner; J. A. Armstrong, national bank examiner; Lon Rogers, state bank examiner, Frankfort, Ky.; T. C. Thomas, national bank examiner; E. H. Gough, national bank examiner, and George U. Biegler, national bank examiner.

A NEW HARPER NOVEL, BY MRS. SPOFFORD

Among the shorter books of fiction being issued this season, is a charming little novel written by Harriet Prescott Spofford. Mrs. Spofford, who is in her seventy-seventh year and still writes as entertainingly as ever, has named her latest book "The Making of a Fortune." Starting out with a brief discussion of a big project planned by Jack Aversleigh and to be backed by his associates who are looking it over, the story then reverts to his courtship and winning of Emily, a beautiful girl who had always lived in a village and had had her first real taste of the glitter and pomp of society at a house party where he met her and was immediately charmed by her delightful simplicity. How this man of big business ventures and unqualified success in all of his undertakings, noted for his honesty and ability, constantly harassed himself with the morbid idea that Emily married him for all his great wealth could give to her and not for himself; how a little key and a set of rubies costing a little more than a quarter of a million which he lavished upon her among other things, form the turning point in the story and make possible the success of the project already referred to, are all told in a very clever manner. Emily is a very lovable girl who adapts herself so readily to her new surroundings and soon has so many friends and so many social distractions that, although entirely true to her husband, she does not realize his need of her. Jack Aversleigh at last is made to see, in part at least, the true state of things and is almost as happy as it is possible for mortal to be. "The Making of a Fortune" is a splendid story for a couple of hours on a hot summer afternoon when anything too deep and intense would be impossible. There are four illustrations by Alice Barber Stephens. Harper Bros., New York, publishers. $1.00 net.

The First National of Hoopston has doubled the size of its safety deposit box equipment.

Buys Hibernian

The purchase of the Hibernian by the Continental and Commercial has been practically completed. It looks like a wise move from both ends and the public will approve. A genius for creating and operating big banks is a gift which may not be denied. Both boards, without dissent, have approved and the Continental and Commercial National will issue $1,500,000 of new stock to purchase the Hibernian's $1,500,000 capital on an even exchange of shares. This will give the Continental and Commercial a total capital of $21,500,000 and it will own the Hibernian's stock. The book value of the stock of the two institutions is almost identical at $170 a share.

The Hibernian is to be continued in business as a separate institution in its present location and with its present official force, but George M. Reynolds will be elected chairman of the Hibernian board of directors, the Continental to have control of the board. The smaller bank will continue its separate existence, probably, till the Continental and Commercial is able to move into its new building on LaSalle Street, in about three years. Then it will be housed with the larger institution and will become part of the trust company and savings departments.

The purchase of the Hibernian will give the Continental combination upward of $233,000,000 deposits, according to their statements as of June 8th, total capital of $24,500,000, including the $3,000,000 of the trust company, surplus and profits of more than $12,000,000 and making totals of $268,000,000. The deal will make a total of twelve banks in the Continental's combination. Several years ago it took over the old International and the Globe National and later the National Bank of North America. With the American Trust and Savings Bank, acquired in 1909, were absorbed also the Federal Trust and Savings Bank and the Mutual Bank, which the American had bought. With the Commercial National, which was taken a year ago, were also absorbed, the Bankers' National, which the Commercial had bought and the Lincoln National, which the Bankers' had bought. The Hibernian is the latest addition to the combination, though that is not to be absorbed at present.

The deposits acquired by the Continental through these consolidations amount to $109,000,000 out of the total of $197,000,000 shown by the bank and its trust company as of June 8th. When Mr. Reynolds became connected with the Continental it had about $12,500,000 deposits. Independent of the consolidations therefore, it has increased about $75,500,000.

It will take about five weeks to work out the purchase, which is a purchase pure and simple of Hibernian stock from the holders. No corporate change is necessary.

POSTAL BANKS FOR ILLINOIS

Washington, June 13.—Chicago Heights is to have a postal savings bank July 13th. It is among the fifty postoffices designated to-day to have a depository on that date. Among the other offices selected are Granite City and Madison, Illinois; La Porte and Whiting, Indiana; Le Mars and Waverly, Iowa, and Hancock and Ishpeming, Michigan.

Two of Iowa's Leading Bankers

JOHN McHUGH
SIOUX CITY

A. F. DAWSON
DAVENPORT

Mr. McHugh is president of the First National at Sioux City and presided at the Mason City convention as president of the Iowa Bankers' Association. His address should be read by all interested in association or group work. It is far out of the ordinary.

Mr. Dawson is the new president of the First National at Davenport. He was for six years confidential secretary to the late Senator Allison and has served six years in Congress, during which time he had much to do with financial affairs of Congress and the government. As a public speaker of note he will be of value in the councils of the state and national associations. The First National Bank of Davenport was the first national bank in operation in the United States and is one of the best in Iowa.

The Conventions

During the coming week five states will hold conventions for which important and interesting programs have been prepared. Chief among these in importance to western bankers is the twenty-second annual meeting of the Minnesota bankers at Bemidji on Wednesday, June 21st. A special hotel train has been organized leaving the Twin Cities on the night of Tuesday, June 20th, starting from St. Paul at 8:30 p. m., and from Minneapolis at 9 o'clock. The visitors will live on the train and the trip will include a visit to International Falls.

The convention will open at 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning in the Armory at Bemidji and will be called to order by President L. A. Huntoon of Moorhead who will deliver his address. There will be reports from Secretary Charles R. Frost; Treasurer A. G. Wedge, Jr., and two important addresses. Hon. J. A. Tawney of Winona will have a semipolitical subject and Hon. Kelsey S. Chase, superintendent of banks, will talk on the "Registration of Commercial Paper." A recess will be taken at 11:30 and delegates and visiting bankers will be conveyed to Diamond Point on Lake Bemidji to partake of a "Pike Dinner." There will be an afternoon session at 4:30 at which the principal address will be by Joseph Chapman, Jr., of Minneapolis on "Educational Reform in Minnesota." Professor Weld of the State Normal School will talk on "Training Teachers for Agricultural and Industrial Instruction." Honorable Lafayette Young of Des Moines, Iowa, will speak on "The Banker and Other Men" at the evening session. The Minnesota bankers have undertaken quite a task in holding their big state convention in a small city like Bemidji. There are but two hotels in the place and although they are well managed, except for the special plans of Secretary Frost, the convention would have proven a failure. At International Falls there will be a boat trip on Rainy Lake and the immense power plants at that place will be visited.

New York Convention

New York bankers will hold their eighteenth annual convention on June 22d and 23d at the Oriental Hotel, Manhattan Beach. New York bankers have a choice of a great many summer resorts and the attractions of Manhattan Beach with its fine hotels only forty minutes' ride from New York City ought to draw a very large attendance. The hotel headquarters will be immediately upon the ocean front, insuring the comfort of the guests. The program will lay especial emphasis upon the currency reform question and Joseph T. Talbert, vice-president

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

OUR Kansas City correspondent—Allen—joined the June procession and was married on Tuesday of last week. Hereafter his interesting letter will be better than ever. Honeymoon in Chicago.

DOPESTERS on the Hibernian situation certainly had it all wrong for once. Of course several interesting combinations could have been made. Too many bankers—big ones at that—want to buy amalgamation banks cheap. G. M. R. is willing to buy them dear and make them the seller and the buyer both a profit. You can't keep a really good man down—nor head him off.

ILLINOIS has a joy-riding chauffeur law now. Here's what the judge said to the first chauffeur convicted under a similar law in New York. "You are a joy-riding chauffeur. The law now provides that the taking of any one's automobile and operating it for the purpose of the taker and for the use of the taker, without the owner's permission, is plain, everyday larceny, and the joy-riding chauffeur is a plain, everyday thief. There is good sense in this law. "In view of the facts disclosed in the sworn testimony against you, the sentence of the court is that you be imprisoned in the penitentiary for one year."

F. W. JULIN is well and favorably known to thousands of bankers. Formerly he was with the Bankers Engineering Company, but now he is out for himself, at 1414 Hartford building. He designs plans and builds bank buildings, fixtures, furniture, etc. He's able, conscientious and fair in charges, so give him a chance to figure your improvements. If he can't help you he won't charge you.

GEORGE WOODRUFF is being congratulated on taking over the Citizens National and thus making the First of Joliet one of the first rank banks in the state outside of Chicago. Any one who thinks that young Woodruff regards life as one huge joke can have two guesses.

"I BELIEVE," said George Woodruff in discussing the consolidation, "that the time has come for a new era in banking in Joliet. The entire sentiment of the country favors concentration and the strength which concentration in financial and industrial affairs properly conducted, brings. It is the wish of the officers and directors of the First National Bank to create a bulwark so strong financially that it will be able forever to stand between the institutions of Joliet and any menace of financial adversity."

THE First of Joliet has an "associate board," one of the first of its kind and this board is elected regularly and meets regularly. It fixes the policy of the bank and the executive staff does the rest.

DOWN at Seaton, Ill., the safe of the Bank of Seaton was blown Saturday night and from the resulting explosion the bank and five or six other buildings were burned.

GEORGE E. ROBERTS, director of the mint, on account of family illness, was not able to go to the Idaho convention, and John Perrin of Indianapolis took his place on the program.

PENNSYLVANIA had but 321 members in the state association in 1895. In 1911 they have 1,111 and still going. The gain for the year is 44. The council of administration during the year refunded to the various groups $3,682.00, and to the trust company section $1,000.

BLACK HAWK NATIONAL, Waterloo, Iowa, is one of the first to distribute paper drinking cups with the banks ad. on the neatly folded utensils. Quite a hit and not nearly so expensive as many less effective plans. The Black Hawk has passed the million and a half mark.

THESE little paper cups go nicely into an envelope and take printing nicely, which in no wise affects their usefulness. A veteran Iowa golf player assures us they will convey high-balls to their destination in fine style.

NOTHING went wrong in the protective committee's field except the cashing of a few bad checks. This the careful burghers hope to eliminate next year.

PENNSYLVANIA is flatly opposed to one western fad—the segregation of deposits. The state convention takes an annual kick at it and this year the council of administration passed the following: "Resolved that the Pennsylvania Bankers Association is unalterably opposed to any and every plan for the segregation of deposits that has ever been proposed."

SECRETARY KLOSS praised the group system in the state and gave it credit for the present advanced standing and high record of the state association.

DIRECTORS of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York have declared an 8 per cent quarterly dividend on the $5,000,000, capital stock of the company. The deposits of this company now exceed $140,000,000, considerably more than those held by any other trust company in America. Dividends of 32 per cent a year are not so common in banking lines either.

JAMES W. MAXWELL is the live wire out Seattle way. Can't be kept out of the banking business. When his name was connected with the purchase and conversion of the Commercial State into a larger bank the new shares were doubly subscribed. The new bank, The National City, of Seattle, opened June 1st with half a million capital and $100,000 surplus. Seattle now has seven nationals—half as many as Chicago.

MR. MAXWELL, who was at one time national bank examiner in the Pacific Northwest and later cashier of the National Bank of Commerce, and cashier and vice-president of the Seattle National, is president of the National City Bank. With him are associated as vice-presidents, F. W. Baker, president of the Title Trust Co., and J. H. Bloedel, president of the Larson Lumber Co. The position of cashier will be filled later. W. B. Shoemaker, who held the position of cashier in the Commercial State, wishes to be relieved in the near future and temporarily accepted an assistant cashiership. C. B. West, formerly with the Seattle National, is an assistant cashier.

LAFAYETTE YOUNG of Des Moines, ex-senator, editor and popular lecturer of course doesn't write out his addresses. He says if he does he invariably delivers another or gets off the track so far that the resemblance is lost. He will talk extemporaneously at Bemidji, Minnesota, convention.

FRANK A. WELCH, head of the State Normal at Moorhead, on the same program, is in the same boat. For years, when Joseph Chapman, Jr., was secretary of Minnesota, manuscripts were barred. Now, no Minnesota speaker will "own up" to having a written speech about him lest he find himself in bad form.

LATELY we have been receiving papers on the proposed monetary plan, running from 38 to 50 pages of typewriter manuscript. Think of them and the thermometer in the nineties. Really going to some bankers conventions is a hazardous occupation.

DON'T get fooled. The young man who wants to prepare your ad. copy may be the dearest of dead ones and yet fool you with a few choice extracts from the pages of a "Cyclopedia of Selling Phrases." It contains deposit-getting phrases also and if you like that sort of thing you can buy it for $15.00 and save putting the "new man" on the pay roll.

NATIONAL CITY BANK, Chicago, opened February 5, 1907, with $2,198,337.25 in deposits. In two years it went to twelve millions and in two more years to $23,309,555.86. That was on January 7th, this year, and on June 7th the deposits were $29,259,966.56. This indicates a state of health that ought to keep the doctor away for some time.

THE National City Circular continues optimistic thusly: "People everywhere are benefiting from the year of wholesome restraint which has helped to fortify conditions in all parts of the United States. There is not the same extravagance of living as there was a year ago. By exercising both public and private economies the position of the whole country has been rendered materially stronger."

HENRY M. CARPENTER, president of the Monticello (Iowa) State Bank, has been in Chicago the better part of a week witnessing his son's graduation from the University of Chicago. On Wednesday evening he went to Mason City with the Chicago bankers over the Northwestern.

CHICAGO, JUNE 17, 1911

At Mason City

Address of President John McHugh in which he advises a higher type of organization for the State Associations

The purposes and objects of this association as set forth in the preamble to the constitution, in so far as they were intended "to promote the general welfare and usefulness of banks and banking institutions," have, during the quarter of a century of its existence, been in large degree accomplished.

By gathering together in the annual meetings of the association and in the group or district meetings, thus extending members' acquaintances, listening to the discussion of important subjects by thoughtful students and bright, practical men of banking experience, and participating in the discussion of banking topics, the members of this association have profited far more than one would realize, and they have through this instrumentality, become better equipped to successfully conduct their respective banking institutions.

But in so far as the purpose and objects of this association as set forth in the preamble to the constitution, were intended "to secure uniformity of action," I cannot say and I do not think that we have made the most of our opportunities. We are not a unit, nor do we act uniformly on important questions, much as I dislike to own this fact.

When I was made the recipient of that ferment and honor at your hands a year ago which placed me in the office of president of this association, I determined that no effort should be spared on my part, in the short space of time allotted to me to serve in that capacity, to at least initiate a plan that would, if followed out, in my opinion, eventually lead to greater organization, the object in view being to secure "uniformity of action" by the members of this association. To that end I advised the members of the executive council that there would be during my term of office, at least quarterly meetings of that body, and that the council would be expected to direct and pass upon every important affair of the association, to be fully advised of every step taken by the officers, and to approve the disbursements of the association, all in so far as it would be practical to do so. It is but timely here to state that the executive council has acted accordingly and the members of the council have responded heartily to the requirements. It affords me great pleasure now at this the end of my term, to express to them my sincere appreciation of their co-operation and interest at all times during the past year in the work of the association.

At the last convention, after having given very careful consideration to the subject, it was decided to employ a secretary whose duty it would be to give his exclusive time and attention to the affairs of the association. For that important position, you selected P. W. Hall, of Sheldon, and the headquarters of the association with him in charge. His work has been most effective. His office is now recognized as the headquarters from which may be had, by any member, valuable information and assistance in many ways. To him I deem it but eminently proper for me to acknowledge my appreciation of his able assistance in our efforts to initiate and develop methods that would lead to "uniformity of action."

I have had the pleasure of attending many of the group meetings during the past year and in every case I found splendid attendance and an indication of great interest in association affairs. I became greatly impressed with the possibilities of greater organization within the association and the benefits that must accrue to the members in the event of going systematically to work to consider, and to get results after considering, the many questions of importance to bankers that come up from time to time.

As the chairman of each group is a member of the executive council and as the several group chairmen constitute a majority of the council and, as it seems to me, that in order to secure "uniformity of action" eventually, our efforts should be to voice the decisions of the members of this association through the group chairmen to the executive council and thereafter through the latter, thus making the executive council a governing body in fact, I have taken occasion to promote the idea that from the group meeting should emanate the thought and instructions that would find their way into the executive council and there enter into the administration of the affairs of the association. To successfully bring this about; however, I have urged that group meetings should be held far more frequently than once a year, or at least whenever questions of importance should have careful attention.

Under the plan as adopted during the past year, the group chairman as a member of the council, has an opportunity to become familiar with and pass upon every affair of the association, and through him the members of his group have an opportunity to become fully advised of and have a voice in the administration of the affairs of the association.

It is well within the possibilities, however, to go very much farther than this in the way of organizing for "uniformity of action." My thought is, that at a time when the legislature is in session or at a time when questions of great importance are occupying the attention of the bankers of the state, the several group members ought to get together in their group meetings for counsel, summon to their aid all information available upon the subject to be discussed, discuss such subject intelligently and conclusively, and then by a majority vote, instruct the group chairman as a member of the executive council, just what position to take when such matters came up for consideration in the council. The chairman then, with other chairmen constituting a majority of the council, would be in a position to lay before the officers of the association and before each other, an intelligent consensus of the opinion of the rank and file of the association. In the matter of prospective state legislation, for instance, under this system of considering it, the conclusion of a majority of the council would be the conclusion of a majority of the members of the association. Every member of the association should, regardless of possible conflicting individual opinions, support any conclusion thus reached. It is true that the conclusion reached might not and very probably would not be in harmony with the view of every member of the association, but it would be in harmony with the views of a majority of the members, and if the minority, imbued as they ought to be with the proper spirit of loyalty to the association, would support the majority, it would mean organization worth while, and the purpose and objects of this association, in so far as they were intended to secure "uniformity of action" would be accomplished. Better would it be to err once in a while in presenting a united front than be always lacking in that mutuality of interest that would insure uniform action.

If in the advocacy of equitable legislation, the 1,500 members of this association could be depended upon for united action, it would mean that included in that support would be their officers, directors and many of the stockholders and employees, and you can readily see that through such support they would be a power that would be bound to succeed in accomplishing anything reasonable which they set out to attain.

During the session of the legislature the past winter, the officers of the association, the council and proper committees gave a great deal of time and attention to legislation which it was deemed advisable to promote. They also considered certain proposed legislation which was thought to be inequitable. Much good was accomplished and certain bills that were favored became laws. The repeal of the tax ferret law urged so strongly by bankers and other business men of the state, might be referred to as an accomplishment in which we took a leading part. Had we had organization, however, such as I have suggested, and the executive council and the committees having to do with legislative affairs, and the public and the legislature, in fact, had it been generally known by all concerned, that that which was decided upon by a majority of the executive council would receive the undivided support of every member of this association, regardless of possible individual opinions to the contrary, much more could have been accomplished.

My suggestions may, at first thought, be considered radical; they may be thought to be more along theoretical than practical lines, but I am confidently of the opinion that we can select eleven bankers in the state—one from each group—men known for their organizing ability, and through proper effort bring about such organization as I suggest. I am further confidently of the opinion that if we should develop such effective organization and through it "uniformity of action" on every important question that concerns the welfare of the members of this association, we would value our memberships so highly, we would gladly and willingly pay a greater sum annually to support the association than we are now paying. I am confident, too, that in such event, our membership would include every banker in Iowa instead of 90 per cent of them as is, I regret to say, now the case.

The details of the business of the association during my administration will be given to you through the medium of the reports of the secretary, the treasurer and the chairmen of the several committees.

I would call your attention to the showing that the burglary insurance and fidelity bond business placed through our association during the past year, has been more than doubled and the commissions from this source are about twice what they amounted to for the preceding year. There is still room for greatly increasing this business to the advantage of members and with profit to the association, as there is less than one-half of the burglary insurance and fidelity bond business of the banks of the state placed through the secretary's office. I would urge upon the members the advisability of placing just as much of this class of business as it is practical for them to do through the association. Of course, I recognize the fact that in many cases, for reasons peculiar to the members' local situation, we cannot expect to handle all of the business; still, undoubtedly there is a great deal of it that could be written through the secretary's office with advantage to both the member and the association.

We have continued our membership in the Interstate Protective Association during the past year chiefly for the reason that we were already members prior to that time, and for the further reason that we were disposed to the opinion that there was a certain amount of protection afforded the members of this association by reason of that membership. I am disposed now, however, to the opinion that in view of the cost of that membership and in view of the efficient work of our secretary's office in apprehending a number of forgers during the past year, and in view of the further fact that the secretary keeps constantly in close touch with the movement of many known criminals, in so far as it is practical for him to do so, that we are not in need of continuing our membership in the Interstate Protective Association at its present cost. I would recommend that before it be continued or be dropped the advantage of continuing the membership at its present cost be carefully looked into by the incoming council, and at the same time, due consideration be given to the equipment of our own headquarters, now that it has been established for a year and proven of practical benefit, to protect our members as efficiently as we have been served by the Interstate Protective Association. I would recommend, too, that the advisability of offering small rewards for apprehensions of those committing fraud against any of our members, be carefully considered. I particularly refer to small rewards which might be offered to sheriffs and other municipal officers.

The officers of the association, the members of the executive council and the members of the taxation and legislative committee during the recent session of the legislature, gave much time to the consideration of certain proposed legislation and urged, with success in many instances, the adoption of certain remedial laws. As I have heretofore stated, they took an active and leading part in urging the repeal of the tax ferret law. I believe that the successful efforts of your officers, council and committees in promoting the repeal of that law were of great importance to the members of the association. Had it not been repealed, I am confident that the continued efforts of the tax ferrets under the old law, would have operated to the great disadvantage of the business interests of the state and would have found direct reflection in the deposits of the banks of the state.

The reduction of the tax on moneys and credits to five (5) mills was, I believe, a long step in the right direction and will result in much capital returning to Iowa that sought investment in states having more liberal laws than we had heretofore. Several instances are known where large sums have been returned to Iowa since the tax ferret law was repealed and the new law, providing for the five (5) mill levy, was passed. To have these funds returned is of no greater importance to the bank than it is to every business man in the community in which such funds shall find employment. These funds enter into the channels of trade and people in all walks of life and business engagements share in the beneficial results that are bound to follow the employment of a greater volume of banking funds. It is quite within the possibilities that if no tax whatever were imposed on moneys and credits, the results would be proportionately more beneficial. Funds for investment will seek the most friendly localities, and taxing such funds in Iowa, when they can find equally desirable investment in another state without the imposition of a tax at all, will only result in such funds leaving Iowa.

Our efforts have not been as successful as we would like to have had them in securing the enactment of a law providing for satisfactory taxation of banking capital. All that could be done under the circumstances, was done during the recent session of the legislature to secure the passage of a law that would be satisfactory to all of the members of this association.

The taxation of bank stocks and the taxation of moneys and credits would furnish excellent subjects for discussion in our group meetings during the two years that will now elapse before the session of the next legislature. If we discuss these subjects intelligently and conclusively, with a view to reaching an equitable solution of them and not with a view to avoiding the payment of a just share of the expenses of government, reach a conclusion and see to it that the conclusion has the support of every member of this association as well as the support of all those we can summon to our aid, I am confident the result will be satisfactory.

The past year has been, in the main, a prosperous one. Our farms and fields have yielded abundantly. Our factories and industrial establishments have been well occupied. There has been a ready market for all of our products at profitable figures. It is true that there has been some slowing down in the general business of the country, but it must not be forgotten that such "breathing spell" periods are to be expected and have their beneficial effects.

Before concluding, I deem it my duty to call your attention to the proposal for reforming the banking system of the United States, submitted by the National Monetary Commission of congress. No suggestion made in years for reforming our currency system has induced such widespread discussion or elicited such general interest as has this ingenious plan. The suggestions as made are entirely informal and no effort has yet been made to enact them into law; nor is it probable such effort will be made until the plan has been thoroughly and carefully studied. Bankers and other business men the country over are making such study of it now. They are endeavoring to familiarize themselves with its advantages and trying to determine the adaptability of its provisions. I do not consider it opportune for me to attempt its discussion at this time. I do, however, commend it to you and urge its careful study free from prejudice and with full appreciation of the benefits and consequences of its enactment.

In conclusion, I desire to acknowledge my appreciation of the assistance rendered and the uniform courtesy extended to me during my administration, by your former president, my predecessor, Mr. Stevens, your vice-president, Mr. MacKinnon, your secretary, Mr. Hall, by the executive council and by the chairmen and members of the several committees.

BANK DEPOSITS GROWING IN CHICAGO

The growth of Chicago as a reserve center is the talk of banking circles everywhere. Deposits in fifteen national banks in Chicago aggregate $461,153,033, against the previous high record of $452,642,062 at the call of March 7th, an increase of $8,510,971, or 1.88 per cent. As against the call of June, 1910, deposits have increased 10½ per cent.

Changes in growth in the other items of the statements have been small. Loans increased $5,539,617, or 1.77 per cent. Cash resources are relatively stronger, showing a growth of 3.69 per cent.

The Continental and Commercial National shows the largest gain in deposits, $5,827,000. The Fort Dearborn made $1,550,000 increase over March. The National City increased $1,580,000, the Live Stock Exchange $1,385,000, and the First National $900,000. The Monroe and Washington Park National banks show record deposits, the former with a $330,000 increase over March.

Comparison with June, 1911, is unsatisfactory as the call at that time came to the last day of the month, following an unexpected demand from the country which contributed to lowering deposits and loans.

The present call follows that of March by exactly three months, and the January call by exactly five months. The changes in the last ninety days, both in volume of business and in ratio to each other, have been less significant than in the first two months of the year.

ILLINOIS BANKING NEWS

By C. C. Burford

It is generally considered over the corn belt that the early crops of oats, wheat and hay will be very short. One of the best counties was said to be promising only twenty bushels of oats to the acre and this can be expected since there are many fields in that county which have received no rain for as much as seven and eight weeks. Straw will be very light and hay very scarce. It is believed that corn being deeper rooted has not suffered greatly and that with later rains will do well. The effect upon bankers will be obvious as farmers will in many cases be disappointed in their "early money" as the returns from oats and hay are called. As one country banker expressed the situation, "my fellows will mostly want to renew." Corn will be the crop of promise if favorable weather conditions prevail.

Monticello Banker Dead

John N. Dighton, Sr., president of the First National of Monticello and one of the leading farmers and stock raisers of Piatt county is dead at the age of fifty-four years. He owned 500 acres of excellent land besides property in Monticello. William Dighton, vice-president of the same bank, is a brother.

Mattoon Bank in New Home

The Mattoon National has removed into its new well equipped banking quarters. The cash and the books of the bank were removed to the new location under heavy police protection and the old room was soon turned over to its new owner. After July 1st the new banking rooms will be occupied by the First National which is to be the consolidation of the First National with the Mattoon National. The business of the Mattoon Trust Company will not be pushed extensively and will await the success of the new consolidation.

Illinois Notes

The State Bank of Sidney, a new institution which opened its doors about May 1st, has shown the right spirit in joining the Illinois Bankers Association. Another new member of the Association is the Bank of Ludlow.

Blue Island, Harvey, and Savannah are among the new postal banks for Illinois. Three a week are now being established in the state.

Deere and Company, the gigantic farm implement combination of Moline, has certified to the secretary of state that its capital would be increased from $50,000,000 to $65,000,000.

A. R. Dow, cashier of the First National of Geneva, was injured recently when an automobile in which he was riding crashed into a bridge post.

The Palmer National of Danville, which has recently fitted up one of the best banking rooms in eastern Illinois, reports deposits of $677,198, and loans and discounts of $709,469.

L. K. Scroggin, president of the bank of Scroggin and Sons of Mount Pulaski, was recently removed to his home in that city from the Springs at Kramer, Ind. In spite of his age of ninety-two years Mr. Scroggin is now improving in health. He is one of the oldest bankers in the state of Illinois.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF DENVER

A. V. Hunter has been elected president of the First National Bank of Denver, Colo., succeeding the late D. H. Moffat. Thomas Keely continues as vice-president of the institution, and F. G. Moffat, who has been cashier, also becomes a vice-president. Changes in the directorate which follow the recent acquisition of a controlling interest in the bank by Hayden, Stone & Company, include the election to the board of Charles Hayden and J. A. Hayes and the new executive, A. V. Hunter. President Hunter is also president of the Carbonate National Bank of Leadville, Colo., and Mr. Hayes, one of the new directors, is president of the First National Bank of Colorado Springs.

At Hot Springs

Oliver J. Sands, of Richmond, leads in the discussion of Topics interesting to Virginia bankers in an address of rare merit. Pays tribute to Morgan

In my endeavor to present for the consideration of this body the matters of interest to Virginia bankers, I have found myself so deeply involved with the numerous subjects and the great diversity of things, in which we are and should be interested, that I am overwhelmed.

It therefore, seemed to me to be proper that I should simply outline a few subjects, and that we should consider and discuss them together, in order that we might get the views of our members from all sections, and that we would become more interested in solving some of the problems, which have for their purpose the improving of the banking business; the commercial development of the state, and the prosperity of our people.

The issue paramount at this time, and in which we should be interested; first, as citizens of this great country and second, as bankers, is the reform of the banking and currency laws.

This matter has been handled before you by the ablest of men in this particular line. It has been discussed at our convention for years.

In my address as president of this association in the year 1903, I was bold enough to make some observations on the subject.

This plan of reporting everything that is said at these conventions and printing it in permanent form, has some redeeming features I will admit, but it has some very embarrassing features also which we are bound to recognize when we read views expressed by us years before.

I seriously question the probability of this country ever being able to adopt a radical revision of the financial and banking system all at one time. We may believe that such a law should be passed, and agree upon all the features of the law; still under our system of government, with the temper of our law-makers, and the people stirred by a sensational and yellow journalism, it appears to me to be almost a hopeless task, and one that may only be accomplished through the aid of some terrible financial depression, which will bring the entire business and working element of this country to its knees. Then the people will rise in their might and demand from their representatives such a law as will make it possible to avoid the repetition of these periodic panics, which carry in their wake so much human suffering. What suffering is compared with it? Through no fault of theirs bankers become old and decrepit, paralyzed and mentally incompetent almost overnight;—business men of high character and standing embarrassed, discouraged and helpless—laboring men and their families in want, and our great country disgraced in the eyes of the whole world. What suffering I say compares with it?

I have seen men suffer, and I have no doubt, other bankers here of long experience as officers will bear me out in the statement, more on account of financial loss and business failure than I have ever seen them suffer on account of any other trouble, which they are called upon to bear.

The 1907 panic brought more gray hairs than are produced in ten years under ordinary business conditions. These conditions are brought about by numerous and varied cause; the cause may be in New York, in San Francisco, or some other section, the effect is country-wide, and the innocent all over the land suffer because of the indiscretion or an accident, which has occurred, and which really involved only a few in the beginning.

Don't understand me to say that I want this revision to be brought about at such a cost—may the Good Lord protect and preserve us from such a thing. I do, however, believe it is necessary to consider the awfulness of these things while conditions are good and times are prosperous.

This reform can only be brought about through the efforts of our business men, and not until they are stirred to action will we secure such remedial legislation as will enable this country to successfully ride the waves of adversity and commercial depression. Much is needed to impress those interested in banks with the importance of this subject. Bankers as well as merchants, get so busy looking after customers and getting new ones, that they put it off, and leave this subject to be taken up at some future day hoping that our servants in congress—few of whom are practical business men—will devise something to protect them, or that the thing will never occur again.

Like the lazy farmer—when the skies are clear, the roof does not need mending, and when it's raining and the roof leaking it can not be fixed—so we drift. While much should be done to make the banks take up this matter, still more is needed to impress the business man, and I think that Mr. Vreeland and other prominent men should give most of their time to the presentation of this subject to the commercial element of this country, rather than to the bankers.

We bankers, I am sorry to say, are not deep students of this subject, most of us are employed by our banks to perform specific duties. The banks are owned by a number of shareholders. It is our business to earn dividends and make the best out of what is put in our hands, and we don't bother ourselves much about the great questions of financial laws—economic principles, etc., etc.

My purpose is to talk plain, to bring out cold facts as they have appeared to me after twenty-five years of experience and observation. Are these facts not rue?

We are all endeavoring to discharge the duties imposed upon us with fidelity, and to get the best results for our stockholders, but we are inclined to be satisfied with what we have now, for fear that any change in laws might effect our business in some way so that it would be less profitable.

We, as a class, are narrow and timid. Our present system makes us cowards—we are afraid to say the currency laws need revision, because of the fear that the public would lose confidence in banks—the slightest suggestion under our present system, might bring trouble that will cause us to run to New York and beg for help—if New York is able and inclined to get it, otherwise—"Good Lord deliver us."

How many of our directors have even felt sufficiently interested to read the proposal of the monetary commission? I have no doubt that many bankers could be found that have not read it, and few that can discuss it intelligently. It seems to me, therefore, that it is perfectly natural that the commercial interests of this country should be most interested.

Bankers, for the most part, have a way of taking care of themselves—everyone else, most properly should suffer before the banks, as its depositors must be protected, and the borrower suffers the most. The business man is the hindmost and the devil gets him.

Don't understand me to say that the National Reserve Association is the only way, or that any law can be framed that will be an absolute preventative of business troubles and depressions.

I do say that there hasn't been a serious panic in England in fifty years, and that no other civilized nation can suffer as we are called upon to suffer under our present system.

It is a positive crime to permit the present

CHICAGO STATE BANKS GROWING

Aggregate figures for the fifteen national banks and fifty-five state banks of Chicago show total deposits of $940,869,980, an increase of $35,327,606, or 3.91 per cent, over the previous high record of last March. The reports sent in answer to the calls of the comptroller of the currency and the state bank examiner show a tendency to pile up cash resources, which gained 5.34 per cent in the quarter, while loans increased 3.19 per cent.

The more marked changes were in the reports of the state banks, which established a new high record in deposits, considerably over the national bank totals, and 5.94 per cent above the former record. Loans increased 4.79 per cent and cash 7.43 per cent.

Of the individual banks the Merchants Loan and Trust shows the largest gain in deposits, $5,280,000. The Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings grew $3,230,000; the First Trust, $3,800,000; Illinois Trust, $1,780,000; Central Trust, $1,650,000; Union Trust, $1,600,000. The People's Trust and the Standard Trust, organized last summer, showed gains respectively of $1,140,000 and $1,550,000. The Hibernian deposits are up nearly $1,000,000 and Colonial $940,000.

Since the last call one state bank has gone, the Railway Exchange, which was absorbed by the People's Trust and Savings. The following new banks appear:

American State, Douglas State, Fort Dearborn Trust and Savings, Home Bank, Lake View State, Midcity Trust and Savings. The Calumet Trust and Savings is included since the entrance of its territory, Morgan Park, into the city of Chicago.

MILWAUKEE

NEWS LETTER By Mortimer I. Stevens

WISCONSIN

Publication of the statements of Milwaukee banks, both national and state, showing their condition at the close of business, June 7th, shows that the national banks report a loss in both deposits and loans since the last statement issued March 7th, while the state banks show a slight gain. Expressed in figures the national banks show a loss in loans during the three months amounting to $2,209,561 and a loss in deposits of $2,883,495. The deposits of the state banks show a gain during the same period of $1,203,021.

The cashier of one of the larger national banks is quoted as saying: "Banking business is quiet now. There is only moderate activity. We find good demand for money among country banks with their farm customers who are actively engaged. The farm outlook is so favorable that farm prosperity and farm buying of goods is to be expected. Merchants in Milwaukee have also depleted their stock for months. They have been buying from hand to mouth and the time must come when these bare shelves will be replenished, which will mean a revival in manufacturing lines. The rest of the year promises to be good in a business way. Trade should improve from now on through the summer and fall. We look for a steady growth in trade activity but not any quick boom which would do more harm than good."

State Banks in Good Condition

The state banks of Milwaukee are showing a good growth. Loans show a gain of 1 per cent; deposits, 5 per cent; cash resources, 14 per cent, and total deposits, 5 per cent. Among the big deposit gains in the state banks since March 7th, Marshall and Ilsley shows 1 per cent; Badger State Bank, 12 per cent; Mitchell Street and Second Ward banks, each 9 per cent; German-American and Merchants and Manufacturers banks, each 2 per cent.

Bankers Move to Insure Deposits

The first definite step in the movement to organize group clearing house associations and secure mutual insurance for Wisconsin banks was taken at the meeting of Group One, Wisconsin Bankers Association, at Rice Lake, June 7th.

At this meeting a committee consisting of two state bankers and one national banker was appointed to consult with committees from other groups. A plan for the examination of banks under the supervision of the Wisconsin Bankers Association similar to that in use by the Milwaukee Clearing House Association, with its insurance feature in addition, is what is wanted by the bankers.

A resolution was also adopted at this meeting in which the bankers recommended that the legislature postpone action on the Owen bill until the bankers might submit a satisfactory solution of the problem, or until some of the various guaranty plans now being experimented with be found practicable. The resolution was adopted unanimously.

The so-called "Owen" guaranty bill obliges the banks to guarantee each others' deposits with no opportunity of securing information as to the financial standing of the banks guaranteed. If the plan now being discussed by bankers is adopted members will have their own examiners make frequent examinations, and if the bank's condition does not warrant, no bank will be eligible to the benefits of the insurance feature.

Reynolds to Speak in Milwaukee

Through the courtesy of the Wisconsin Bankers Association the business men of Milwaukee will be given an opportunity to listen to the address of Geo. M. Reynolds, president of the Continental and Commercial National Bank, of Chicago, before that association on the subject of "Currency Reform the Paramount Issue."

Mr. Reynolds' speech will be of unusual interest, both because of the subject to be discussed and because of the prominence of the speaker. The address will be given on the afternoon of the first day of the seventeenth annual convention of the association to be held in Milwaukee, July 12th-13th, and the auditorium of some one of Milwaukee's theatres will probably be rented so that all may have an opportunity to hear the Chicago banker.

The convention, itself, bids fair to pass into history as one of the most successful ever held by the association and the prominence of the speakers who will appear upon the program insures a large attendance from all parts of the state.

The morning of the second day will be given up almost entirely to a discussion of agricultural topics as the bankers believe that more publicity and a better understanding of the vast agricultural possibilities of this state should be had. The principal speakers will be W. H. Mylrea, secretary of the Wisconsin Advancement Association, and Prof. R. A. Moore, of the college of agriculture at Madison.

Group Three at Green Lake

The other groups of the State Bankers Association will have to look to their laurels if Group Three does not carry them away this year for a glance at the program of the seventh annual meeting of this group which will be held at Green Lake, June 21st, shows most excellent judgment on the part of the committee who prepared same.

The meeting will be held under the auspices of the Green Lake, Berlin, Princeton and Markesan banks and nothing which could be thought of to make the stay of visiting bankers enjoyable has been overlooked. The session will cover two days, the program for the first days being as follows: Call to order, Ernest J. Perry, president of the group and cashier of the First National Bank, Fond du Lac; address of welcome, C. S. Morris, president Green Lake State Bank; response, Adolph Pfister, cashier Bank of Sheboygan; roll call, to be responded to by answering the question "Why Am I Here?" Annual address of group president; report of secretary-treasurer, E. R. Williams, cashier Commercial National Bank, Oshkosh; address, Honorable J. H. Davidson, Oshkosh; paper—"Bank Examinations," Louis Schriber, cashier Old National Bank, Oshkosh; remarks, Chas. C. Brown, president Wisconsin Bankers Association, Kenosha; remarks, "What Has Wisconsin Bankers Association Accomplished This Year?" George D. Bartlett, secretary; general discussion.

The morning of the second day will be given over to listening to papers by J. W. Hansen, cashier Citizens State Bank, Sheboygan, and W. R. Dysart, assistant cashier First National Bank, Ripon, after which the annual election of officers will be held.

A boat ride at 11 o'clock followed by a fish fry at the head of the lake is also one of the features of the day.

conditions to continue. It should be considered the most important thing before the people to-day--of even more importance than the investigation of everything and everybody, who has had something to do with the wonderful progress and development of this country during the past decade.

We should make our policies constructive, not destructive, so that in banking and in all other forms of business and commercial life, we can assume the position in which our God-given opportunities and resources have placed us;—the forefront of the nations of the world.

Now, to the point of getting a general revision all at once—it may be done—I am willing that it should be, but I am doubtful of its accomplishment.

If something could be devised which has for its object the final adoption of a complete system, the first step taken by this congress, the next by a future congress, after proving the first, something may be done. This appears to me to be the practical way—but not necessarily the best.

We should not fear a national reserve association or a central bank properly organized.

We have to-day a centralization of the money power of this country, not equaled or possible in any other great nation. Through its wonderful control of the vast wealth and its unlimited ramifications and connections with the railroads, manufacturers, banks and natural resources, there is not a village in the whole country that can not be made to feel its power in a moment, and we could all be crushed as an egg shell.

Fortunate are we that this great power is presided over by that wonderful man of character and patriotism, a man to whom history, I believe, will give credit as being one of the greatest constructive geniuses and best citizens, of all ages.

But gentlemen, beware of that power if it falls into the hands of a different type of man. Mr. Morgan is an old man—we can't afford to run the risk of delay—his present power and influence is much too great—greater I think, than the best informed of us have any idea of.

If we can get the people stirred and interested, I have little doubt as to a bill reasonable and safe being evolved. The matter therefore, I suggest for your consideration and discussion is how to get the people, bankers and business men to take a real live interest in this subject, so that some action may be forced at an early date, while the country is enjoying a period of financial confidence and general prosperity.

A. B. A. CONVENTION DATE CHANGED

It has been announced from New Orleans that the A. B. A. convention date which had been fixed for November 13th will be one week later, November 20th. This has had the approval of General Secretary Farnsworth and will give northern bankers just time to get home comfortably for Thanksgiving. The chief hotels have been "oversubscribed" and delinquents in the reservation line will be heard from later. The big Train de Luxe from Chicago is two-thirds full. Get your name on the list.

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, June 15.—Wide diversity of opinion still exists among St. Louis bankers as to the monetary situation. In certain quarters some improvement is reported, while elsewhere the situation is summed up as "distressingly slow." While the inquiry from the country has doubtless picked up during the last two weeks, it is still not what was expected for this particular time. There is a disposition to hold off, owing to uncertainty which exists on account of crops. Experts in this region are hopeful enough about the total wheat yield, but the drought and unusual weather early in the month have caused apprehension, and revived ultra conservatism. Crops other than cereal are not so promising as early in the season. Dry weather has lessened yields of produce, and prospects for future outturns. Farmers are not disposed to be so hopeful, especially that portion which raises a diversity of crops. Shipments of currency and gold to the interior this week have been fairly large, and good engagements are reported for next week, but the volume of this movement so far this season has fallen below what was anticipated. General business in the city in certain lines has picked up since the first of June, and unless crops are very disappointing, this betterment is likely to continue. The wholesale district reports good sales, though the outlook for fall trade is not quite so rosy as it was this time last month. Tonnage of railroads centering here shows good gains since the first of the month. The adjournment of congress, and disposition for a time at least of the unsettling questions up before that body, is expected to have a refreshing effect upon general business.

Cash Reserves Unusually High

The most striking feature of the call for statements on June 7th with the St. Louis banks was the enormous cash reserves. Compared with a year ago the cash and exchange item shows an increase of approximately $20,000,000. The deposits gained something over this sum, while loans and discounts were only about $4,000,000 over a year ago. Compared with March 7, 1911, the cash and exchange shows a decrease of about $4,000,000, which is due to the demands of country banks, and withdrawals made by the City of St. Louis and Board of Education. On the whole bankers consider the showing made quite unusual, and eccentric financial and commercial conditions are reflected by the totals. The low interest rates have kept local bankers from pushing a very vigorous campaign to reduce their reserves. There is little profit in the present range of rates, and bankers handling the agricultural business have preferred fortifying themselves against the movement, rather than put out a lot of money now at a low and unprofitable rate. Some banks show loans pretty well down to reserve requirements, but these are the exceptions. One thing manifest is an exceptionally strong position. The financial institutions here are most certainly in condition to cope with demand which increased commercial activities or a bumper crop make upon them, and while heads of the institutions would like to be doing a heavier business, they are fairly well content, and argue that the present statement should banish any vestige of lack of confidence.

Summer Disbursements will be Large

Holders of securities listed on the St. Louis Stock Exchange will get a nice thing in the way of vacation, or summer dividends. Of the stocks listed about $3,508,600 will be paid, and interest on bonds will total nearly $1,800,000. The banks will pay out to their stockholders $767,000 and the trust companies $490,000, making a total of $1,257,000. The dividends of other concerns will amount to $2,251,000. It is difficult to form an estimate on unlisted corporations, but as only a small percentage of the corporations are on the list, the outside total will run vastly over the sum paid by corporations whose securities are traded in in this market.

Merchants-Laclede Celebrates

The sixteenth anniversary of the consolidation of the Merchants National and Laclede National banks, forming the Merchants-Laclede National, was celebrated by the officers and directors of that institution this week. It is the annual custom to commemorate this event with a dinner and entertainment, one of the vice-presidents or the president being host. The host this time was Governor D. R. Francis, and the dinner was at the Log Cabin Club. In the afternoon there was an exciting golf match, in which Benjamin McKeen outclassed his opponents and was declared victor with loud acclaim. The trophy was a cup, the most beautiful ever given in a golf tournament in this city—so far as the case was concerned. The case was of Morocco leather and plush, fastened with gold clasps, but the cup which it contained could have been duplicated at any hardware for 10c. Upon the tin was engraved: "To the Champion Golf Player of the Merchants-Laclede National Bank Board of Directors."

Windfall for St. Louis Banks

Within the next few days State Auditor Gordon of Missouri will refund money advanced by them for the support of the state board of immigration during the biennial period. The perfect the appropriation left the commission without funds, and the banks of St. Louis, Springfield, and Kansas City patriotically came to the front and supplied the needed money, taking the risk of the legislature reimbursing them. St. Louis banks put up $9,346.97; the citizens and banks of Springfield $8,333 and the Kansas City banks $6,500. The St. Louis money was distributed as follows: National Bank of Commerce, $2,622.42; Commonwealth Trust, $133.10; Franklin Bank, $212.96; German Savings Institution, $292.82; Mechanics-American National, $984.94; Mercantile Trust, $771.98; Merchants-Laclede National, $533.67; Mississippi Valley Trust, $718.74; St. Louis-Union Trust, $958.32; South Side Bank, $79.86; Third National, $1,038.18. In addition to these amounts, John H. Curran, Chief Immigration Commissioner, obtained $200 each from the following institutions before the general loan was made: Mercantile Trust; Merchants-Laclede National; Mississippi Valley Trust; National Bank of Commerce and Central National, which will also be paid.

Jefferson Bank Elects Bullock

At its annual election this week the Jefferson Bank made one change in the vice-presidents. Richard B. Bullock was elected vice-president to succeed J. F. Conrad. The officers re-elected are: W. H. Steele, president, Henry Wood and E. M. Woolger, vice-presidents and H. W. Kroeger, cashier.

CLEVELAND CHAPTER

The Cleveland Chapter of the American Institute of Banking has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Louis J. Kaufman, Guardian Bank; vice-president, Charles F. Thie, Jr., Citizens' Bank; secretary, C. W. Stansburg, Garfield Bank; treasurer, B. S. Chamberlain, Citizens' Bank. As members of the board of governors the following were elected to serve two years: F. L. Archer, H. D. Cozad, E. L. Geffine, W. H. Kinsey and P. J. Slach.

NEW YORK CHICAGO

THE FIRST NATIONAL OF MARQUETTE

The First National of Marquette is one of the important banks of Michigan. L. G. Kaufman, head of the big Phenix and Chatham National, New York, still is its president. Edward S. Bice is its executive vice-president and has had great success in this capacity. Charles L. Brainerd is the cashier. Deposits are very close to two millions and growing.

A number of years ago it occurred to an officer of the First National that if people could buy by mail satisfactorily, they could bank by mail, and if large transactions could be conducted between banks by mail, smaller transactions could be so conducted between customers and the bank. A system of banking by mail was therefore inaugurated and to-day the bank has a great many banking by mail customers who reside miles from it and who are obtaining as satisfactory service as though they were able to come to the bank in person. It is the modern method of banking, say the officials.

WORLD'S GOLD PRODUCTION

Production of gold by the various countries of the world, according to the London Economist, reached the total value of £93,355,863, or, at the rate of $5 per pound, the equivalent of $466,779,315. This total includes an estimated output of Russia, whose figures are not available for 1910. Of this total, the British Empire produced 56.7 per cent valued at £52,927,842 ($264,634,210). The United States produced 20.6 per cent, or more than one-fifth of the world's production. The largest increase in amount in 1910 was in Russia, where there was a gain of $5,958,890, or 22.1 per cent. Australasia as a whole lost 7.8 per cent, Africa gained 2.4 per cent.

Greenebaum Trust

The famous private banking house of Greenebaum Sons, Chicago, has converted to a trust company and goes under state supervision which it appreciates and endorses.

The Greenebaum business was started in Chicago more than sixty-five years ago when on January 1, 1855, Elias Greenebaum opened his investment and real estate mortgage business office. The founder of the business, though 89 years of age, still takes active interest and is at the office part of every day. He is the father of Henry E., Moses E. and James E. Greenebaum, members of the firm since 1877. In addition there are four grandsons also in the business.

The investment and mortgage business is one of the chief activities of the bank. The firm has underwritten numerous issues of securities and there are now outstanding in Chicago $100,000,000 of first mortgages which it has negotiated.

Greenebaum Sons Bank and Trust Company, is the new title, which starts with an excellent business that has been built up by the members of the Greenebaum family since the foundation in 1855.

The capital stock of the incorporated bank is $1,500,000. The active management will continue in the hands of members of the family who have been in charge for years. Some influential outside interests have been admitted as stockholders, however, and these will be represented on the board of directors.

The officers and directors are announced as follows:

President—M. E. Greenebaum.

Vice-President—Henry E. Greenebaum and James E. Greenebaum.

Cashier—Walter J. Greenebaum.

Assistant cashier—Milton E. Falker.

Directors—M. E. Greenebaum, H. E. Greenebaum, J. E. Greenebaum, A. G. Becker, W. N. Eisendrath and H. L. Stern.

CENTRAL WEST LETTER

By EDGAR P. ALLEN

Omaha

The bank call of last week found the banks in Kansas City and vicinity short in deposits as compared with recent statements. "Three is nothing discouraging in that," says E. W. Moore of the Pioneer Trust Company. "Such is to be expected here at this time of year." The cause is laid to the shortage in country bank balances.

Conditions Good

Money is easy and the rates good in Kansas City. In some quarters is heard a complaint over the lack of demand. Inquiries, however, have been had from Texas and Oklahoma looking forward to the time when the movement of crops shall demand much cash. Such demand will not be made for at least thirty or sixty days and the banks of Kansas City, Wichita, Omaha and other Middle West cities are reported to be amply able to take care of it.

Continued Drouth

Continued drouth in Kansas and Missouri and sections of Oklahoma has caused not a little anxiety for wheat and corn. Reports from central Kansas have it that corn is very backward and the leaves curl like a lead pencil in the middle of the day. In that section wheat will be a crop but other products are greatly in need of rain and the crops are in jeopardy. Quoting from a letter written by a Central Kansas banker to a Kansas City correspondent: "The current of money in Middle Kansas is against us. Cattle are not being marketed and automobiles are being bought by the score. The farmers are frightened in a measure over the growing crops and looks as if there is nothing left for us to do but return to making real estate loans again." Wheat has been made in Southern Kansas and a fair yield expected. Advices from McPherson, Ellsworth, Rice, Barton and Marion counties in Kansas show that wheat and corn will be good crops. In the northern section of the state the dry weather has caused hope of crops to be abandoned. The same is true of a number of the southern tier of counties in Nebraska.

That the wheat yield of Oklahoma this year will amount to but about 8,000,000 bushels as against 26,000,000 in 1910 is the general opinion among grain dealers in that state. On May 25th when the last monthly report of the Oklahoma State Board of Agriculture was sent out, the growing condition of the wheat throughout the state averaged 53 against a normal 100. The secretary of the department says he sees no reason at this time to revise those figures. The 1910 crop was far above the normal.

Banking Notes

Gordonville, the largest village in Grayson county, Texas, is to have a state bank with a capital of $10,000. The officers: H. C. Sanderson, president; J. A. Lloyd, vice-president; C. M. Zeigler, cashier.

Municipal business of Oklahoma City is suspended pending the inventory of the effects of city by order of the newly elected commissioners and the auditing of the books and records turned over to them by the city council. The work will be completed in about two weeks.

Brady, Tex., has voted $75,000 in bonds for road improvements.

The $75,000 issue of waterworks bonds voted by Nowata, Okla., have been sold at a premium to Spitzer, Rorick and Company of Toledo, Ohio.

President Claude D. Rorer of the Oklahoma State Bankers Association has appointed the following members of the executive advisory committee as provided for under a resolution recently passed by the association: Charles E. Davis, of Elk City; O. J. Fleming of Enid; E. H. Emmerson of Sparks; I. H. Nakdimen of Salisaw; B. R. Brundage of Tishomingo.

H. C. Nicholson, formerly of South Omaha, has been appointed a state bank examiner by Governor Aldrich of Nebraska. He succeeds C. W. Irwin of Omaha, who resigned to accept the cashiership of the Corn Exchange National Bank of Omaha.

Following an application in person Monday night by President Bush of the Missouri Pacific railroad, together with W. D. McHugh and other officers of the road, the Nebraska railroad commission in Lincoln granted the right to issue $20,000,000 in notes for permanent improvements. The commission issued an order August 9, 1909, authorizing the Missouri Pacific to issue $83,251,000 of stock in exchange for capital stock of the consolidated lines of the company. President Bush announced that the expenditure in Nebraska would be for the improvement of the right-of-way and that no extensions of the road would be attempted.

St. Joseph, Mo., plans to merge its leading commercial clubs into a central body by the amalgamation of the Commercial Club and the Ad Club.

The First National Bank of Loveland, Ohio, has been placed in voluntary liquidation.

William A. Law to Pennsylvania Bankers

Philadelphia, June 15.—The address of President William A. Law, of the Pennsylvania Bankers, last week is a most able and unusual document. He said in chief:

I bid you welcome to this hospitable city. Everyone who has a hobby can ride it here. If you are interested in any form of sports, you can here find congenial comrades. If your inclination is toward the study of architecture, art, literature, the drama, you can pursue them here. If you turn to civic activities or the great humanitarian and charitable movements, you will find companionship of kindred spirits in this cultured and kindly community. But do not imagine that you can imbibe Philadelphia's real life or discern its charm or realize its beauty by a hasty and superficial view. Abundant leisure is required to understand and appreciate what Philadelphia is and has.

One of the distinguishing characteristics of "Financial Philadelphia" is the elaborate machinery here provided, not for the handling of commerce, but for the care and maintenance of accumulated wealth in the form of trust estates. In most American communities the usual process of acquisition by one generation and dissipation by the next is so frequent as to be proverbial. Here the reverse is the rule. We take pardonable pride in the skill, conservatism and fidelity of our great trust companies. We have strong hopes of soon welcoming them into full clearing house membership.

This is your city, and among the most valued assets of its banks are the confidence and friendship of the interior banks throughout the commonwealth.

Though twenty-ninth in area and second in population, Pennsylvania still leads all the other states in the number of its national banks. One would have to search the country far and wide to find better managed institutions than the old established banks in the smaller cities and towns in Pennsylvania. They operate in strict accord with the spirit of our banking laws; they serve their communities wisely and faithfully, keeping their assets clean and liquid. They diversify their investments; they carry strong reserves, loaning money rather than borrowing it. They are strictly economical in their expenditures and are thus models for the banks in similar towns throughout the country. The comptroller of the currency has wisely put an end to the operations of bank promoters, and state banking departments nearly everywhere are co-operating with him. This removes an element of danger and a source of waste, as banks were being planted where they were not needed and thus established business was being rendered unprofitable.

Election results last fall practically struck a new keynote in politics. With the passing of once popular actors came the entry of several new figures upon the stage. In each party some of the more prominent aspirants for political honors to-day are advocating measures tinged with extreme radicalism if not actually socialistic. Party lines have shifted substantially, and party principles are less clearly defined for the time being. The voice of the insurgent is heard in the land. It is difficult to predict how much farther we are going to swing toward socialism and away from the individualism that has made the United States what it is.

Pennsylvania's principal concern in these political changes is, of course, with the matter of future tariff revision. When we count those of our population who own manufacturing plants; those who operate them; those who furnish them raw material and fuel; those who finish, transport, and distribute their products, we have enumerated a large percentage of the people of our state.

The year has been marked by a return to the idea that government bonds must be sold at a price comparable with that of other high grade securities and on intrinsic merit, and must not depend for their absorption in the markets upon special privileges granted to national banks to induce their purchase as a basis for additional circulation. That market has about reached the saturation point. Thousands of national banks have heretofore sustained substantial losses in their patriotic endeavor to co-operate with the treasury department in buying United States government bonds when issued. The difficult task of the present secretary of the treasury was not only to open up a new market, but to obtain congressional authority to increase the interest rate and simultaneously to preserve existing values of older issues for the protection of present holders.

The recent efforts of the administration to obtain the congressional enactment of an agreement providing for Canadian reciprocity have opened up a new field of high commercial importance. The proposition for closer trade relations with Canada and the removal of artificial barriers between these two sister countries, appears to have met with popular favor. But all legislation of this sort, just as all tariff revision, affects values temporarily at least, and entails uncertainty and hesitation among some of our mercantile and manufacturing customers.

The last year has been marked by prosperity among farming interests, by exceedingly high commodity prices for most of the necessities of life, and by record foreign trade balances

ADVANCED IDEAS IN ORGANIZATION

Those who have in hand the remodeling the constitutions of state bankers associations or of shaping the policies of an organization will do well to study the address of President John McHugh at Mason City. Good bankers often hold these honorary positions but good organizers with political and state craft instincts are scarce. Mr. McHugh makes a strong plea for united action on the part of the membership of the state association and outlines how could be brought about. He also tells a few of the instant and certain advantages of such an organization and it's certainly worth while.

Coming from the head of the great Iowa association gives his plan prestige. Heads of associations for 1911-12 could do no better than to adopt Mr. McHugh's recommendations. Certainly there ought to be some way of determining the will of the majority of a state association. In legislation work this especially is necessary. Some states have left this sort of work to volunteers who have appeared upon every occasion, upon all sorts of questions and without credentials. Little wonder they are so little heeded. The wonder is that they are listened to at all. The new Iowa plan is to have the sentiment of the association originate in the groups and from them to concentrate in the council, which will hold regular, frequent meetings. The voice of the association then will mean something.

It isn't too late to use some of Mr. McHugh's excellent ideas in revamping the Illinois constitution.

PRIVATE BANKERS UNDER SUPERVISION

After many futile attempts to protect the public against irresponsible private banks, the New York Assembly at Albany has passed the Sullivan-Foley bill. Heretofore the private bankers have been strong enough politically to either kill the bill or nullify it by amendment. This time these tactics failed just as they always must fail when the public finds out how the poor continually are robbed of their savings by incompetent or dishonest "bankers." In the New York situation, the unscrupulous foreign banker, just as was the case in Pennsylvania, was the real cause of war. The new act is intended to curb them, particularly in lower East Side, New York, and in the mining districts, and yet it was given power and was intended to bring private "banks" under the supervision and control of the state banking department. It also requires foreign banks to conform to the rules and restrictions of the state banking department. There was opposition to the bill at the time of its introduction, but Senator Sullivan met these objections by introducing a measure in which are two sections, providing that no foreign banking corporation except a national bank shall transact business in the state unless the corporation is authorized by its charter to carry on such business in the state or country where it was incorporated, unless the actual value of the assets "is at least $250,000 in excess of liabilities, and unless it shall have complied with all the provisions of its charter and the laws applicable to it, and shall have received from the state superintendent of banks a license to do a banking business in this state."

There was not one vote recorded against the bill. Pennsylvania passed such a bill and Illinois should take courage.

LABOR'S ORDEAL

Union labor is undergoing an ordeal in Chicago, almost entirely and selfishly self-inflicted. Not the sluggings, murders, and cruelties alone, but the rivalry in jurisdiction is the chief cause of a deeper trouble—that of income. The mothers and the children of the unemployed suffer at every walkout. They skimp and starve through every strike. The original aims of organization were to increase wages, shorten hours of toil and to better the conditions of employment, such as discharges without cause. Most of us sympathized with these and for a time they only were the causes of strikes and disputes between employer and employee. To-day most of the strikes and walkouts result from a contest of "business agents" as to which union shall do the work and which "agent" shall get the rake off, "fines," etc. To illustrate further the case of the new Harris Trust building, in Chicago, is but a fair sample of how it works. On Tuesday morning the United Association of Steam Fitters now employed on the building were laid off and the carpenters, bricklayers and other trades returned to work. The plumbers and electrical workers, who sympathize with the United Association of Steam Fitters, were expected to walk out. For the past three months it has been a continuous circus performance. First the plumbers and electrical workers struck because International Association steam fitters were employed. After a time the steam fitters were discharged and United Association men employed in their places. The plumbers and the electrical workers returned to work. This did not suit the carpenters, bricklayers, hoisting engineers and other trades who sympathized with the International Association steam fitters, and they walked out. Now it is their turn (since Tuesday) and the owners of the building, which was to have been finished by May 1st, expect that with ordinary luck it may be finished by May 1st of next year. They have given up hope of getting all the trades to work there at one time, so they are doing the next best thing by getting one faction to work a few weeks and discharging them, so that the other faction may work a few weeks to even matters up. It is a farce and union labor cannot hold together, nor can their families live comfortably under the system. Nothing but a return to first principles and to real benefits rather than continue a warfare in which labor is the victim of the automobile-riding business agent and his band of sluggers, can save the unions.

THE HIBERNIAN

On the first three days of this week, the Continental and Commercial National purchased the Hibernian Banking Association by an even exchange of stock to the amount of $1,500,000. The Hibernian shares went up about forty points and the Continental and Commercial about ten. Thus at the very start the new doctrine of reciprocity, wherein an exchange can be made without loss to either party, as was once believed impossible, was vindicated. This gives Chicago added precedences for it will not be long until the "second largest" bank becomes the "first largest." Bank absorption, like that of railroads, scarcely attracts attention any more, except in the added power and glory it gives to the master hand.

Big banks no longer mean crushing power, as the public once thought, but power to assist business, to strengthen smaller banks, and to wield an influence for good on the community. This is Mr. Reynolds' idea at least and no one ever has questioned his honesty or sense of fairness—not even his rivals—if he have any.

A MILLION DOLLAR DIVIDEND

Stockholders of the National Safe Deposit Company, which owns the building occupied by the First National Bank, on Tuesday approved the declaration of a stock dividend of 40 per cent, or $1,000,000. The new stock will be distributed at once to stockholders of record June 12th. The larger part of the amount will go to the First National, which owns control of the Safe Deposit Company. The stockholders re-elected the old directors and the directors in turn re-elected the retiring officers.

At Lake Tahoe

Addresses by John Perrin, of Indianapolis, on Monetary Legislation, in which he draws some interesting conclusions

Lake Tahoe, Cal., June 15.—Mr. Perrin's fine address on the monetary plans centering in the National Reserve Association easily was the feature of the California bankers convention. In the main his views have not changed much since you gave in part, in THE CHICAGO BANKER, his splendid address before the Tennessee bankers. His résumé of the provisions of the monetary plan are the best known, and his conclusions most interesting. He said in part:

In 1906, the American Bankers Association, influenced by those who scented the danger of approaching crisis and appreciated the weaknesses of our banking system, appointed its currency commission of fifteen members coming from many sections of the country. After careful deliberation this commission concluded that comprehensive banking legislation was then politically impossible and decided to limit its activity to an effort to secure legislation that would be a small step in the right direction. What it proposed was feasible and sound, but failed of enactment. As the outcome of that effort, however, and as an alternative for the legislation denied, it was influential in securing the appointment in 1908 of the congressional monetary commission. For three years this commission has made exhaustive investigation and profound study of the banking systems of the progressive countries of Europe and of our own situation, calling to its assistance the ablest experts at home and abroad. The volumes published containing the reports of investigations and the writings of experts comprise to-day the most valuable library in any language upon banking systems, banking experience and banking practices. It is easy to see the benefits in European countries of banking systems depending on the great central banks, but those systems for the most part have developed step by step, in law and in custom, as the commerce has developed. Here we have already a highly developed commerce, and a wonderfully ramified system of individual banks, adding infinitely to the difficulty in planning comprehensive results without revolutionary changes. But the suggested plan submitted to the monetary commission is at once peculiarly fitted to our needs and ingeniously adapted to our present banking system.

Certain amendments to the plan have been suggested by the currency commission of the American Bankers Association. (Here Mr. Perrin outlined the plan.)

State Banks and Trust Companies

Another difficult problem has been that of extending to state banks and trust companies the benefits of this plan. At the last conference of the monetary commission and the bankers currency commission about April 1st, the view was expressed that national charters might be so liberalized as to include the powers now exercised by state banks and trust companies chartered institutions to re-incorporate under federal law, thus bringing about unification of the entire system. After much discussion a special committee of the bankers currency commission was appointed to consider and prepare a special report on this matter. The committee gave the subject much consideration and consulted not only with the executive officers of the trust company section of the American Bankers Association of which Oliver C. Fuller, of Milwaukee, is the able president, but also with the heads of many representative state banks and trust companies, including two leading California bankers (Mr. Sartori and Mr. Drake of Los Angeles) who were in the East at the time. It completed its work about May 1st and made its report to James B. Forgan, vice-chairman of the currency commission. The keynote of the special committee's recommendations is that no discrimination be made favoring either national or state banks one over the other, but, without change of charter, character or methods of business, that all share equally in the organization and control of the National Reserve Association, prescribing as a standard of eligibility, requirements as to capital, reserves and supervision, approximating those made of national banks.

At the meeting at Nashville early in May of the executive council of the American Bankers Association, Mr. Forgan included the recommendations of the special committee as a part of his report of the work of the currency commission, and at that meeting delivered a most able and comprehensive address analyzing the plan and its possibilities. His convincing presentation resulted in the adoption by unanimous vote of a resolution offered by F. O. Watts, approving the plan as modified by the currency commission.

Bank Examination

It is my own view, and in this I speak only for myself, that ultimately examination and supervision of banks, both national and state, would be entrusted chiefly to the branch managers, after a plan not unlike that once proposed by Hon. Chas. N. Fowler. Local associations would at times be called upon to endorse for bank members, and it has been suggested that an examiner be employed by each local association to examine the banks composing it, reported to a committee of the local association board after the manner of the special clearing house examinations in Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis, New York, Los Angeles, Minneapolis and other cities. But it appears to me that supervision by competitors would have its disadvantages and possible abuses. The acts of a branch manager, appointed by the governor of the association, and in no wise a competitor, would be more apt to be free from the influence of selfish motives. It would be the branch manager who would have constant dealings with the banks of his district, and his direct examination and supervision would enable him to proceed, under approval of the branch board, with promptness and precision growing out of intimate knowledge of the condition of each bank in his district. In a case of unsatisfactory condition, his admonitions and helpful suggestions would be influential in bringing a lax management up to proper standard, under penalty of discontinuance of rediscount privileges.

Size and Strength of the National Reserve Association

The aggregate capital of all national banks is just above one billion dollars, and of state banks and trust companies combined, about eight hundred millions. If all these should subscribe, the total paid in capital would be one hundred and eighty millions, four or five times as great as the capital of the Bank of England, the Bank of France, or the Imperial Bank of Germany. The national banks of the

ELECT OFFICERS

The Tennessee Bankers Association elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

President, Wesley Drane of Clarksville; vice-president for eastern Tennessee, H. E. Jones of Bristol; vice-president for middle Tennessee, F. C. Stratton of Lebanon; vice-president for west Tennessee, A. S. Elder of Trenton; treasurer, Thomas Mottley of Lynchburg.

New home of the Central State Bank to be erected at 312-315 5th Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

GUARANTY TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK

The Guaranty Trust Company of New York makes the interesting announcement that it is now a member of the New York Clearing House Association, and that on and after June 12, 1911, all items deposited with the company will be cleared through the New York Clearing House. Of the several trust companies which have recently joined the New York Clearing House the Guaranty Trust Company is quite the largest, having deposits in excess of $140,000,000, and total resources of over $175,000,000. As a matter of fact there are now in the city of New York and indeed in the entire country but two or three banking institutions which exceed the Guaranty Trust Company in size. Its growth during the past few years has been quite remarkable, and with its recent consolidation with the Morton Trust Company and the Fifth Avenue Trust Company, has been able to assume its present prominent position among the leading financial institutions of the country.

HARRIS TRUST STOCK DIVIDEND

At a special meeting of the Harris Trust and Savings Bank yesterday the stockholders authorized an increase of $250,000 in the capital stock, as recommended recently by the directors. After the meeting of stockholders the directors authorized the transfer of $250,000 from the undivided profits account to capital account and the distribution of this $250,000 additional stock pro rata to stockholders of record May 29th.

This action raises the capital of the bank to $1,500,000. The surplus is the same amount and the undivided profits reported June 8th were $418,000. The deduction of $250,000 would leave a balance of about $168,000 in this account.

The stock of the Harris Trust is $500 a share bid. The earnings of the bank in the last year have been around 50 per cent on the old capital.

The Michigan Convention

Emory W. Clark, president, tells of the greatness of his state and of his confidence in the National Reserve Association Plan

It is a personal gratification to me to meet with the Michigan bankers on the occasion of this our twenty-fifth anniversary and to endorse the welcome to Detroit which Mayor Thompson has so agreeably expressed.

We frequently see you here individually when you have business on hand and on such occasions it often happens that our time is taken up with business to such an extent that there is hardly an opportunity to more than discuss what is necessary. This is often a personal regret to me and it was with a good deal of pleasure that I announced this morning to others less fortunate in the office that I would not be back for the balance of this week, having made up my mind to enjoy with you, the pleasures of the occasion, at a time when business should be omitted.

While it is true that we all hope that these annual meetings will result in a closer and more intimate business association with each other, it is equally true that the pleasures of the occasion are uppermost in our minds. Our entertainment committee has been diligent in preparing for your coming and it is our belief and hope, that you will go home with the sincere conviction that the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Michigan Bankers Association has been worth your while from every point of view.

After all, the deeper significance of these gatherings is the growth and development of the spirit of the co-operation. From our secretary's and treasurer's reports, you will hear that we have the co-operation and influence of the largest membership in our history, supported by the best financial report that our treasurer has ever made, so that we are in a position to better prosecute the work, and influence of the association looking to better laws and higher standards for banking than ever before in our history.

In this connection I must make especial mention of the excellent work during the year of our efficient attorney, Hal H. Smith, both in directing new legislation at Lansing and in advice rendered on the many subjects referred to him by the members of the association.

Our secretary, Mrs. Brown, has guarded the interests of the association as faithfully as heretofore, and our increased membership and financial condition is largely due to her untiring efforts in the interests of the association. The work of the association in furnishing burglar insurance has had a growing appreciation by our members and the bulletin published has kept the members in touch with the progress of the legislation at Lansing and is read with a greater interest that ever by our large membership.

In turning over in my mind what subject would be well for me to consider at this time, I was forced to the conclusion, that as human nature is prone to complain of our surroundings, that we possibly do not to a proper degree appreciate the advantage which we have, in having our lot cast in this great state of Michigan, where on every side the development of our natural resources and industries are giving us all the opportunity that we could reasonably hope for, and when we consider this development, increase in farm products, how our factories and industries of every nature are multiplying and to the extent that the bank deposits throughout the state are increasing, we can get some idea of the wonderful opportunities which we have as compared with some of our less fortunate neighbors of other states in the union.

The year 1910 witnessed an enormous liquidation both in the commercial lines and the securities market throughout the country, and Michigan records for the period, indicate a condition considerably above normal, it is a safe prediction therefore, that when the general business conditions throughout the country improve, and activity again steps in Michigan will be in a position to be in the van of such movement.

With us last year marked new records in many directions; for instance, our iron and copper mines, the greatest in the world show their enormous production of 45,000,000 tons of iron ore and 260,000,000 lbs. of copper. There are thirty-nine producing coal mines in the state, which gave up over 2,000,000 tons of marketable coal. Our farmers were paid last year over seven million dollars for the best crop alone, which supplied our sixteen sugar refineries. Our commerce with foreign nations increased to the enormous total of forty-nine and one-half millions, an increase of 15 per cent over 1909.

The capital invested in our manufacturing enterprises points out possibly as well as any other record, the great increase in the industrial development of our state; for instance, the statistics show that in 1900 there was $269,765,000 employed; in 1904 the figures had grown to $337,894,000 and in 1910 it is reliably estimated that there is $500,000,000 capital invested in the manufacturing enterprises of our state.

Our total bank deposits of the state have grown since November, 1905, from $271,308,000 to November, 1910,—$385,000,000 an increase in five years of nearly $114,000,000 or 42 per cent.

The population of the state during the past ten years has increased from 2,420,000 people of 2,810,000, a gain for the ten years of 389,000 or about 16 7-10 per cent. I doubt if there is another state in the union whose development has exceeded that of our great state of Michigan, and am sure that no state in the Union will show a more substantial growth or development of so permanent a nature as that of our state.

As the plan suggested for monetary legislation is uppermost in the minds of all bankers to-day, I wish to refer briefly to some of the salient points that were impressed upon my mind at a recent meeting of the council of the American Bankers Association at Nashville, where the proposed plan was discussed in detail by James B. Forgan, president of the First National, Chicago, and while it is not worked out to its completion the council went on record as unanimously favoring the plan as a whole, feeling that we cannot long enjoy established prosperity if our securities are to be depressed and our credit impaired by the periodical suspension of our banks, and that the most important subject before us to-day is reform of our banking and currency system.

Under the National Reserve Association plan it will be advantageous for the member banks to carry their reserves with the central organization and with this accumulation of reserves from all parts of the country, it is believed that the money stringency as we have known it in the past, cannot recur, for their will be no advantage in the banker hoarding a surplus which in itself will go a long way toward avoiding panics. This plan is so comprehensive that should it prevail it will take from the banker forever, the excuse that he needs his money to move the crops, for with the opportunities for re-discounting there will be no difficulty whatever for the banks of the country to meet the demands of their customers whenever an emergency arises and at the same time this expansion is fully safeguarded.

The benefits of such an association which will permit plans for development of industries to be consummated over a period of years without fear of financial stringency cannot be estimated. At our dinner to-night we will hear two able addresses on this subject by men who have devoted a great deal of their time to it during the past two or three years. As you probably know the plan for the National Reserve Association of the United States which is now being presented to the country, for consideration, is the one proposed by the National Monetary Commission as corrected in conference with the Currency Commission of the American Bankers Association, of which A. Barton Hepburn, New York, and James B. Forgan, president of the First National, Chicago, took very conspicuous parts. Mr. Hepburn has long been a student of finance and is, I believe, conceded to be one of the ablest exponents of sound banking that we have in this country and James B. Forgan's matured judgment as has been proven many times, is very safe and reliable. The reform however in its broadest aspect is of greater importance to the public generally than to bankers. Bankers can worry through suspension and panic, indeed they sometimes make larger profits than they make in normal times. The real sufferers from a panic are the numerous weak holders of depreciative securities, the ranks of laboring men, deprived of work and the business man of all kinds whose bank credit is suddenly curtailed. The need of the hour is an enlightened public opinion among all classes, which shall be strong enough to carry through the proposed legislation.

Minnesota

Four hundred bankers are expected at the twenty-second annual meeting of the Minnesota Bankers Association June 21st at Bemidji. More than two hundred have asked for reservations there and an equal number are expected to leave the Twin Cities the night previous by special train on which they will live and will continue the day following to the power plant at International Falls, and then return to the Twin Cities.

Good Crop Prospects

Bankers, railroad men and grain men are enthusiastic over the crop prospects in the Northwest. President F. A. Chamberlain of the Security National says that if conditions are the same as now and there is moisture at that time the bank will probably issue its crop forecast on June 20th. If hot winds are avoided and moisture at the time of harvest, and similar contingencies he expects a fine crop.

A. J. Earling

President A. J. Earling, in Minneapolis Monday, looked for a favorable outcome of the harvest along the line of the Puget Sound extension of the C. M. & St. P. road. He says crops are good in the Dakotas, Montana, Idaho and Washington and also in Minnesota. Joseph Chapman, Jr., vice-president of the Northwestern National, found that the route of the railroads through the Northwest to Montana is like a garden.

Deposits Show Small Gain

Deposits on Minneapolis banks ending June 7th amounted to $90,722,174, of which $71,880,155 was in commercial banks. The loans and discounts were $57,105,599. Deposits showed a small gain compared with the January call and loans and discounts a greater gain. A decrease was developed in comparison with the totals March 7, 1911.

Second District Bankers Meeting

At the ninth annual meeting of second district bankers in Minnesota June 8th at New Ulm a resolution passed in favor of rigid examination of firm floating commercial paper and registration of all paper. The resolutions committee heartily endorsed the views expressed in an address by Judge E. H. Canfield of Laverne, relative to the discriminatory freight rates in favor of the Twin Cities and Duluth and detrimental to the smaller cities and villages of the state.

W. D. Willard, of Mankato, was recommended as a member of the executive council of the state association from this district. One hundred and twenty delegates registered. Charles Silverman of New Ulm was toastmaster and toasts were responded to by Judge Lorin Cray, of Mankato, Kelsey S. Chase, state superintendent of banks, and Albert Pfaender of this city.

The following officers were elected: President, John S. Tolverson of Fulda (re-elected); vice-president, W. A. Streator of Winnebago; secretary, Emil G. Hage of New Ulm.

At the sixteenth annual session of the National Credit Men's Convention in Minneapolis this week one of the speakers was J. B. Forgan of Chicago on "Monetary Legislation as Suggested by the National Monetary Commission." F. E. Holton of the Northwestern National and H. W. Parker of the Merchants' National, respectively president of the Minneapolis and St. Paul association, were prominent figures in the meeting.

W. R. Williams tells the story of modern banking laws and the effects of careful supervision

I thank you very much for the opportunity to present to you a few thoughts that have been suggested to me relating to banking laws and supervision of banks. Law has been defined as "a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong." All of our laws are the result of years and years of experience and none of them have come into existence except as an attempt to improve some rule of conduct already established. At one period of history there were no laws others than the law of "might"; but as civilization advanced and society became necessary it was found that "right" was more important than "might" excepting when "might" was necessary to enforce "right."

Governments were evolved so that "rights" could be determined. Gradually these rights took the form of established laws which provided the means whereby they could be enforced. Society is only possible by law for, if civilization had not advanced to such a state that laws could be established and enforced for the general good without constant resort to force, then the law of "might" would still prevail and society would not exist. Our structures of government are in danger only when "might" is used to obtain laws which are not not general in their application and which are for the purpose of securing privileges to some to the detriment of others or when it is used to resist laws made for the benefit of all.

Banking laws of the present day are the product of long experience relating to the conduct of financial institutions. These laws are designed to lay down rules for the guidance of those who are engaged in the banking business so that they may not meet with disaster and those who deal with banks shall be advised as to the safety afforded them by fixed conditions under which funds may be loaned or invested. Besides the foregoing these laws establish penalties for infractions of the law and provide means for the protection of the innocent or for those who are likely to suffer because of a failure on the part of bankers to comply with the law.

By "banking laws," I do not mean simply those contained in what is known as the "bank act" but I refer to all laws dealing with the business of banking and to all laws applicable to such business in common with all other business and particularly to the laws governing corporations. The latter play a very important part in connection with banking for the reason that practically all banks are conducted by corporations and the laws governing them are very complex.

Banking laws, as well as all other laws, must be general in their nature and application and cannot be made for or applied only to a particular case as they would fail entirely of being a general rule of conduct, thus destroying the real purpose of laws.

Possibly at some time in the far distant future the human mind may be so constructed that the rights of all persons will be known simply as a matter of course and every one will do exactly what is right for everybody at all times and under all circumstances no matter what the opportunity for personal gain may be. When that time arrives there will be no need for written laws; but until then written laws are absolutely essential and the better the laws and the more closely they are complied with the more beneficial they become.

Because of the fact that the human mind has not reached perfection, laws are necessarily imperfect and the man does not exist who can draft a set of perfect laws for the guidance of himself much less for others; and banking laws are no exception to the general condition. However, it does not follow that because the laws are not perfect they should not be obeyed, while at times laws are seemingly unnecessarily restrictive, still the individual would probably, were he permitted to do so, substitute another in its place which would work greater hardship on others than the one now in existence works on him.

All laws are at times very obnoxious to some of us, even the simple laws of everyday conduct as we walk along the street.

These simple laws, however obnoxious they may be at times, are rigidly followed by practically all of us for they are so well known and established we never think of failing to observe them and, to break them, we must deliberately and, in the open, and directly opposed to the rights of others, declare ourself as one who does not care for such rights.

There are those who do not believe that laws are made for their guidance and control and, though not intending to do actual wrong, they pay very little attention to the laws; there are others who have no respect for the laws and are guided solely by their desire for personal gain; and as long as they are not restrained by some force greater than their conscience, they will continue to do as they please no matter how much some one else may be placed in jeopardy; there are others whose ignorance does not permit them to obtain a proper conception of the meaning of the law either in letter or in spirit; and there are others who believe that it is their especial prerogative to interpret the laws as they choose, relying on their strength or the weakness of others to maintain their position.

Were all laws governing banks complied with there would be no demand for a department of government for the purpose of supervising the conduct of banks; but, taking into consideration the fact that laws will be broken by some, and, recognizing the necessity of having means of ascertaining whether a bank is being properly conducted or not, governments have before conditions can develop that will place the depositors' money in jeopardy, generally adopted the policy in one manner or another of supervising the conduct of banks within their respective jurisdiction.

Necessarily this supervision cannot take on the form of general manager nor legal adviser of banks but rather must its energies be directed toward ascertaining whether the laws are being complied with or not; and wherever they are not then to use every legitimate means effectively to enforce a compliance with the laws irrespective of the person or persons involved.

Safety and protection for all can only be maintained by so administering the laws that no one is above the law. This is a fundamental principle in our government although often abused by the enforcing power.

There is probably no business conducted today that bears so intimate a relation to all other business as does banking; and there is no business whose failure to comply with the law opens up such a far reaching possibility of disaster and suffering. A banker bears a tremendously important relationship to all with whom he comes in contact but with none does he bear the same responsible relationship that he does to his depositors. He should therefore do his utmost rigidly to follow the law so that his depositors, who repose every confidence in his honesty, business judgment and integrity, may not be deceived.

Above all he should not consider the laws simply as a thing to circumvent on every occasion and in every manner whenever his personal welfare is to be benefited; nor should he consider the supervising power as one player in a game of "hide and seek" and he the other or make of the transactions between the two a game of wits, relying on his ability to hoodwink the examiner and using his persuasive powers of argument, or other means at his command, to secure another chance to benefit himself or to do something that others are not permitted to do. Nor should a banker be permitted by those responsible for proper supervision successfully to adopt such a course for it would make of banking a farce and supervision a sham.

Fortunately a very large percentage of bankers are men who understand and appreciate the sacredness of the trust that is reposed in them and who accept the trust in good faith, striving at all times to comply with the laws, believing they are good or, if not so believing, striving to make them good. It is not for such men that stringent laws are adopted or supervision established.

Maryland bankers will meet at Deer Park, June 20th, 21st, and 22d and Connecticut bankers will meet at New London, June 21st and 22d.

NEW BANK BUILDING FOR DES MOINES

The Central State Bank of Des Moines has recently given the contract for their new building, picture of which appears elsewhere in this issue, to Messrs. Charles Weitz' Sons of Des Moines. The building is designed by Mowbray & Uffinger of New York City and will undoubtedly be one of the handsomest banking rooms in the state of Iowa. The building material will be largely of New Hampshire gray granite and will cover a space of 44x132 feet. The contract for the vaults have been awarded to the Remington & Sherman Company, and will be in every way adequate to the needs of the bank and the city of Des Moines. The Central State in its last statement shows deposits of $2,800,000 which represents a substantial and steady growth.

Golconda, Ill.—A new bank building is to be erected by the Pope County Bank.

Spokane

Spokane, June 13.—Bankers, railroad contractors and merchants throughout the Spokane country believe that the $600,000,000 bond issue, recently authorized for the Great Northern Railway Company, will be of supreme importance of the states of Washington and Oregon and other parts of the Northwest, as it makes available much capital for extensive development work. Others declare it also means redoubled aggressiveness in this territory by the Hill lines. A prominent railroad official, who will not permit the use of his name for obvious reasons, said there is every indication that James J. Hill plans to carry his battle on the Harriman lines not only into every part of Washington, but will also strengthen his hold in Oregon and ultimately invade California.

It also is expected that the Hill interests, which hold the control of the Spokane & Inland Empire Electric Railway system, will extend the line from Moscow, Idaho, to Hooper, on the Spokane, Portland & Seattle line, thus giving them a new and logical outlet for grain to Portland. Another extension in the state of Washington doubtless will be that of the Spokane & Inland to the Columbia River. The river territory is adjacent to the Great Northern lines and always has been considered as Hill's field.

Bankers Make Tour of Wheat Fields

Nine bankers of Spokane made a trip of 100 miles in automobiles through the wheat fields in Spokane and Lincoln counties on June 7th for the purpose of getting a line on crop conditions. These facts were brought out; splendid growth, considering the lateness of the season; good color, excellent stooking, farmers satisfied and merchants optimistic. In the party were: Edwin T. Coman and William Huntley, president and vice-president, respectively, of the Exchange National Bank; Thomas H. Brewer, president, and Orris Dorman, vice-president of the Fidelity National Bank; Frank M. Marsh, president of the National Bank of Commerce; R. Lewis Rutter vice-president and manager of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company; J. Grier Long, president of the Washington Trust Company; Adolph Galland, vice-president of the Northwest Loan & Trust Company, and A. F. McClaine, president of the Traders' National Bank.

Banking Notes

Eugene E. Crisler has instituted action for $25,000 damages against Harry Jones, cashier of the First National Bank of Wapato, Wash. The suit follows Chrisler's discharge from the bank. He alleges that Jones injured his reputation by false and malicious representations. Jones denies all the allegations in his answer.

T. W. Carroll of New York, assistant to the president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, at the head of a party of officials, was in Spokane on June 6th to inspect the local offices, afterward going to Black Creek in Montana, where he will pass several weeks on a fishing expedition.

Seattle

The council has disposed of $580,000 water-extension bonds, bearing 4½ per cent, at par and accrued interest, to the Washington Trust and Savings Bank of Seattle and the Harris Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago.

Bulletin Summarizes Business in Northwest

The Seattle National Bank's crop and trade bulletin, which has been in preparation by Assistant Cashier William S. Peachy and Publicity Manager George R. Martin, will be issued Monday. The bulletin will summarize business and crop conditions all over the Northwest by counties, and will go into detail. It will be the most comprehensive review of its kind ever issued in this part of the United States.

Seattle Chapter of the American Institute of Banking was visited last week by George E. Allen, educational director of the institute. Mr. Allen was on his way south to attend the meeting of the California Bankers Association.

ILLINOIS GROUP MEETINGS NEXT WEEK

Groups Two and Three, Illinois, will be held next week. Group Two will meet at Peoria on Thursday, June 22d, and Group Three will meet at DeKalb on Wednesday, June 21st. Good speakers have been secured and good entertainment will be provided.

The Chicago Title and Trust Company is trustee for bond issue loan for $300,000, for ten years at 5 per cent, to Liquid Carbonic Company, secured by its local real estate and new plant, which is the largest of its kind in the country.

Des Moines, June 15.—Des Moines National banks gained in deposits over $2,000,000 from June last year to the June call, June 7, 1911. While one of the banks shows a slight decrease as compared to the deposits at the time of the March call, that institution shows a splendid gain as compared to its condition a year ago. Figures as completed the day of the last call showed a gain during the year of $891,912.48 for the Des Moines National; $700,000 for the Iowa National; $481,193.83 for the Valley National. The Citizens National shows a gain as compared with March of $92,249.33.

Predicts Better Times

Lee Stevens, president of the Century Savings, Des Moines, in an address to the Des Moines Credit Men's Association, declared that there is no foundation for rumors of approaching panics. He predicted better times in the fall. Mr. Stevens criticized the farmers for holding on to their grain for higher prices while borrowing money to make investments outside of Iowa or to invest in automobiles. He declared that there is thus a case of "all a going out and nothing coming in." "The big interests are withholding their capital from investment on account of the session of congress and the attitude of the supreme court towards trusts," said Mr. Stevens. "A great deal of money is in circulation in the East. Chicago and New York never had better times than they are having right now. Iowa will have stupendous crops next fall, so every indication shows, and Iowa will be prosperous next winter. Panics are far removed from Iowa or the nation."

The New First National

One of the attractions for bankers at the I. B. A. convention at Mason City this week was the handsome new sixth story First National building which was thrown open to the public only a fortnight ago. A reception was held Saturday night during which time the building was inspected and pronounced all right. The structure cost $150,000. The banking room proper is 56 by 107, with rooms, halls and vestibules furnished in mahogany. The building is fireproof and the bankers who inspected it gave their approval in hearty terms.

Find Loop Hole in Law Taxing Moneys and Credits

Bankers have found a loop hole in the new law taxing moneys and credits. They have discovered that when the real estate investments of a bank exceed the capital stock, the shareholders do not have to be listed with the county assessor. Only one Des Moines bank was "wise" to this fact. That was the Capital City State which has more realty investments than capital. Consequently that institution was the only one which did not file a list of its stockholders with the assessor. The provision is undoubtedly made to prevent double taxation. Many Des Moines bankers objected to the publicity given their stockholders by reason of the filing of the lists and publication of the latter by a Des Moines newspaper.

Death of Anthony Burdick

Anthony Burdick, aged 74, pioneer banker at Davenport and eastern Iowa, is dead. He was president of the First National at Davenport until January 1st, when he retired to be succeeded by former Congressman Dawson. He had been president of the institution since 1887. He was also president of the Davenport Savings. The deceased was born at Erie, Pa., in 1837. He went West when young and located in Rock Island in 1856. Later he removed to New Boston and did not settle in Davenport until 1869. He had been ill for some time. Last winter he started to Honolulu for his health but was advised by physicians to return home as he would not be able to stand the voyage. The funeral was held Wednesday. The presidents of the various banks of Davenport were pall bearers. The employees of the Davenport Savings and First National attended in a body. Both institutions closed at 1:30 P. M. for the remainder of the day.

Decision of Iowa Supreme Court

The Iowa supreme court in an interesting opinion held last week that in assessing capital stock in a corporation, invested in real estate, the value of the latter shall be deducted from the capital stock. The Valley Investment Company of Des Moines has appealed to the court in a case with the city and the city won. The decision is regarded as important in the bearing it will have upon the new moneys and credits bill passed by the last legislature. The Valley Investment Company is incorporated for $98,000. It claimed that as this was invested in real estate, the capital stock was exempt from taxation. The city assessor valued the real estate at $90,000, deducted this from $98,000 and assessed the $8,000 remaining. The lower court sustained the bank and cancelled the assessment on the latter but the supreme court reversed the lower court.

Bank Changes

An important deal was consummated at Waterloo when F. F. McElhinney sold his interest in the Waterloo Loan and Trust to W. R. Jameson and purchased the Jameson interests in the Citizens Savings Bank of Waterloo. B. J. Howrey also sold his interests in the bank, purchased stock in the trust company and becomes active president with Mr. Jameson, secretary and treasurer. Mr. McElhinney is president of the Citizens Savings while C. W. Illingworth is cashier. E. A. French purchased a block of stock in the institutions and becomes one of the directors. He also becomes vice-president and will be active manager of the institution along with Mr. Illingworth.

Resigns Cashiership

F. Y. Whitmore, for nearly thirty years cashier of the State Bank of West Union, has withdrawn from that position and will gradually seek to lessen up the strain of hard work. He will be chairman of the executive committee and will thus retain his active interest in the institution. A. J. Gurney who has been with the institution since 1887 becomes cashier succeeding Whitmore while Frank Kingsbury is made assistant cashier. The institution is one of the strong northeastern Iowa banks.

R. T. Wellslager

R. T. Wellslager last week celebrated his fiftieth year in active banking circles in Des Moines. Mr. Wellslager is now a director in the Central State but for many years was more actively connected with the institution and has always been identified with the banking interests of the city. He was first made cashier of the B. F. Allen Bank, the first Des Moines bank fifty years ago.

Thomas' Acme Air Purifying and Cooling System

After the following "ACME" merits had been demonstrated:

1. Patented feature of spraying in flat solid sheets.
2. Bar and lock, swinging spoon, brass spray nozzle.
3. Automatic flushing and cleansing control.
4. Vertical self-cleansing, non-perforated baffle plates.
5. Removable spray shields protecting casing.

The "ACME" Washer can be operated during all seasons of the year, no auxiliary devices or substitution in method of operation being necessary.

THE "ACME" AUTOMATIC FLUSHING CONTROL is actuated by spray water, the spray heads cleansed individually in rows periodically four to ten times per hour.

"Air Cooling by Contact" by multiple sheet sprays results in a clean, sweet and dry air. Nozzles that vaporize and volatilize the spray water, cooling by Saturation, results in a muggy, heavy, humid air.

We absolutely guarantee NOT to saturate the air—thus insuring a low normal humidity during summer, ranging from 60 to 70 per cent, and NOT 90 per cent.

WASHED AIR Eliminates re-decorating, cleaning and dusting, increases the efficiency of your employees, sweetens the disposition of your clients.

Banking Notes

One of the social events of the season in northern Iowa was the wedding at Marathon last week of Miss June Allison, daughter of Cashier J. E. Allison of the First National of that city to Mr. Roy A. Jarnagin of Cedar Falls. The young couple have gone to Idaho to take charge of extensive fruit orchards owned by the father of the groom.

Baillie is vice-president; George Schaller, cashier; R. A. Jones, assistant cashier. The capital stock is $75,000.

The State Bank at Maxwell has a live "attention drawer" in the shape of a $1,000 window curtain. This particular window shade is composed of sixty ten-dollar bills and twenty twenty-dollar bills. The bills are all of the issue of the First National of Collinsville, Okla., of which J. M. Colburn is president.

The German Savings of Des Moines, at its annual meeting last week, elected Jesse O.

Wells president, succeeding the late James Watt. J. C. O'Donnell was made vice-president and John Hogan was made cashier. An eight per cent dividend was declared.

Police Magistrate Corrigan refused to hold Thomas Latimer, the Pittsburgh banker; Henry DeRidder and John Phillips, arrested on June 9th, charged with being fugitives from justice.

The charge was that the trio had entered into a conspiracy to defraud in connection with the purchase of coal lands in West Virginia.

Latimer declared that the arrest was the result of a conspiracy to harass him. Phillips is a mining expert of Richmond, England, and DeRidder comes from London.

country hold about nine hundred and fifty million dollars of reserve cash. That held by other banks of the country brings the total up to about fifteen hundred million. A substantial part of this would doubtless be rather promptly deposited. The government deposit at the present time would be a total of about one hundred million dollars. If enough banks subscribed to provide a paid in capital of $100,000,000 and deposited say $600,000,000 cash, turning over $500,000,000 of U. S. bonds, the National Reserve Association's balance sheet would show thus:

There would be $800,000,000 money reserve against $1,200,000,000 deposit and note liability. If 50 per cent be regarded as a normal reserve, $600,000,000 would suffice for the $1,200,000,000 liability, leaving $200,000,000 available as reserve for new deposit liabilities to be created by rediscounts for its customers to the extent of $400,000,000, or the association could rediscount to the extent of $1,200,000,000 and still have 33 1/3 per cent reserve.

Reserve Money would Accumulate

One feature which perhaps does not present itself at first glance is that all the reserve money of the country would tend ultimately to find its way into the association's vaults. As depositing banks would ship currency to it from time to time, gold and gold certificates would not be re-shipped upon subsequent calls for currency, its own bank notes being sent instead. The gold certificates would be presented at the United States treasury, and the actual gold taken over by the association, the gold certificates being cancelled. Through this continuance process, substantially all the gold money in the country, that in the United States treasury, that in the reserves of banks and that now in the pockets of the people, would find its way into the vaults of the association, whose bank notes would gradually form the main body of our currency.

The Greenbacks

If authorized by law the association could redeem and cancel the $346,000,000 greenbacks, which have been such a disturbing factor and have caused us such incalculable loss, taking over the $150,000,000 gold now held as reserve against them and crediting it in special account, charging against that account the amount of greenbacks redeemed, and crediting the excess profits accruing to the government until the greenbacks were all cancelled and the account balanced.

Benefit the Pacific Coast

While the establishment of the National Reserve Association would be of incalculable benefit to the commercial interests of the whole country, yet it appears to me that you on the Pacific Coast would have proportionately the greatest benefit. You are far removed from the financial centers, yet like other sections, dependent upon them. Your products all go forward to market within a comparatively brief season, and your banks must finance this movement without the advantage enjoyed by banks in eastern centers of using the surplus funds flowing from one section to aid in financing the requirements of another. Distance adds to your difficulties in the longer time in transit of your shipments and the longer time before you receive returns. With a branch in your midst, however, time and distance, your greatest handicaps, would be eliminated so far as the enjoyment of the benefits of the association would be concerned. In case of need you would turn to your branch to convert your liquid commercial assets into credits subject to check and these at will into bank notes. The whole power and service of the National Reserve Association would be at your command to exactly the same extent as if you were on the Atlantic seaboard.

I believe that this suggested plan will bear the most critical economic analysis, and that it would fortify our banking institutions and give stability to our commerce to a degree beyond our present conception. European economists, familiar with scientific banking systems, tested by time and crises, approve it, though they have ridiculed our present system and wondered at our long endurance of it. In the importance of benefits to our commerce, nothing approaches that of establishing in this country a sound and scientific banking system.

in our favor. In many lines of manufacturing the prevailing high prices for raw materials have retarded distribution. In some lines heavy stocks of goods are still being carried by manufacturers to their distress. Especially in textiles, conditions have placed upon the shoulders of the manufacturer a heavy burden which would be comparatively light if subdivided and distributed upon those of numerous jobbers and retailers in the form of larger stocks.

Probably many of these economic changes are in a measure the result of the panic of 1907 and are partly due to the too rapid recovery from its effects in 1908 and 1909. To those of us conducting banking operations in reserve and central reserve cities, the prevailing low interest rates, especially on call funds, during the last six months have sharply reduced earnings. But an excellent opportunity has been afforded for liquidation and house cleaning. Operations in the speculative markets have been in greatly diminished volume.

We frequently suffer from over-production of various sorts; over-production of mining products and manufacturing goods in certain lines; over-production of special and conflicting legislation; over-production of yellow journalism and cheap fiction; over-production of swollen fortunes; over-production of hastily prepared corporations and indigestible securities. The worst vice of American business men is ambitious over-extension; over-expansion and congestion in our cities. We are always short of food products and farmers; of servants and laborers.

In our special business (banking), the most striking recent developments have been in the enlarging scope of clearing house functions. Formerly restricted to the narrowest lines of operations, the clearing house associations in our reserve and central reserve cities have, by sheer force of circumstances in time of stress and strain, broadened and increased their usefulness. They have discarded the motto "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" and have hung in its place the device, "Behold, how good and how profitable it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." In many cities they are now exercising supervision over all their members through a system of examination, which will probably tend eventually to standardize methods of operation. The recent admission of trust companies to clearing house membership in New York is another notable step forward.

Another development of recent months has been the retirement of nearly all the old leaders among the bank presidents of New York. In that city, younger men have been promoted to the presidency in banks controlling more than one billion dollars of resources.

Our association now has a gratifying membership of 1,100. We can exercise a power for good if our efforts are properly and wisely directed. Are we reaching the limit of our practical usefulness? We are learning to know each other; we are thus overcoming the prejudice that arises from non-acquaintance. We are acquiring new methods and new devices in banking. We are preventing hostile legislation by the exercise of reason and diplomacy, and by the firm refusal to use money. Our group system is well planned and in excellent hands. But are we using all of our machinery to its capacity for the common good? Do we utilize fully the opportunities afforded by our conventions and group meetings for practical discussions and co-operative action? The clearing house associations are teaching us all lessons in co-operation. We must apply these lessons to each coterie of banks in its special community; that is, the lesson of mutual helpfulness, of united action and unselfishness. We can thus bring about greater profit, not by greed, but by practical co-operation in the prevention of waste and loss. We cannot affect any combination to maintain or increase discount rates. The steady decrease in rates is inevitable, though fluctuations are constant. We may co-operate to avoid loss through mercantile failures, preventable by the sharing of credit information; or loss by the non-employment of funds in one section of the country when another section is hungry to use them and able to give security for their safe return at maturity; or loss by the payment of excessive interest on deposits in competing for accounts.

This naturally brings us to the consideration of the most important event of the period, to-wit: The announcement of the proposed plan of the monetary commission for the establishment of the Reserve Association of America. We have emphasized it in our proceedings as it is unquestionably the biggest proposition before the American people to-day, and embodies the first practical, scientific and comprehensive plan for a banking system ever proposed in this country. It involves the idea, not of centralization, but of federation; not of militarism, but of democracy. It embodies the retention of nearly every essential feature of our present system and contemplates an association owned by our banks, both national and state, under a management selected by them, and carefully guarded against control by the politicians or the big interests; the abolition of the independent treasury, an elastic and responsive currency, and the strict confinement of operations to commercial banking. Our banking machinery must be so remodeled that call loans to speculative concerns do not furnish our principal mode of securing liquidity of assets; that the value of the products of our eight million farms, the corn, wheat, cotton and cattle, shall not be seriously affected by mishaps in the plans of a few speculators in mining or industrial securities in our metropolis.

EMISON CHANSLOR, ST. LOUIS, DEAD

St. Louis, June 13.—Emison Chanslor, cashier of the Union Station Bank and former state bank examiner, died at 12:40 o'clock this morning at his home, after a protracted illness of a complication of diseases.

Mr. Chanslor was 50 years old and was born in Lexington, Mo. He served as cashier of the Fourth National and as assistant cashier of the American Exchange and about fifteen years ago was state bank examiner. Mr. Chanslor was the organizer of the Union Station Bank.

very trying but Mr. Carpenter will survive. He felt so certain of Curtin's election to the presidency of the Iowa Association that he wasn't worrying. Among other things he signed for a compartment on the New Orleans special, not having missed one of the A. B. A. talkfests, not for 'steen years.

UNION BANK OF CHICAGO has closed a ground lease of 198 years on the premises at 25 North Dearborn Street and has purchased the building for $100,000 and will occupy it as a permanent home, the entire transaction approximating $1,000,000.

THIS was the home of the former Illinois National. The officers of the bank are Charles E. Schlytern, president; Nilson Arneson and John H. Rydell, vice-president, and G. Hallbom, cashier. The capital stock is $200,000, the surplus $25,000 and deposits $1,500,000. The capital stock will be increased to $500,000 at a meeting of stockholders to be held July 11th to cover the expenses of the deal. The new stock will be paid in at $130 a share, of which $75,000 will be added to the surplus, making it $115,000 in all, and $15,000 will go to the profits.

PPRIVATE, uninspected banks can fail in any country. The Birkbeck Bank, England, hadn't issued a statement of its condition for two years when it failed and didn't have to. Liabilities are $44,380,000. The failure was due largely to the growing distrust in England in that kind of banking.

BANKERS TRUST COMPANY has been appointed depository in New York under the protective agreement in the matter of consolidated mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company of Kansas City, Mo.

A BANK building to cost $100,000 is being constructed on Milwaukee Avenue, at the northwest corner of Division Street, which is being built for the Northwestern Trust and Savings Bank, which has outgrown its quarters at 1152 Milwaukee Avenue. The new building will be of the monumental type, with the appearance of one story on the outside, but in reality two stories. The exterior will be of white terra cotta with mahogany finish inside.

OFFICIALS of the Burlington have announced a through passenger train to be operated between Chicago and San Francisco beginning June 18th. This move on the part of the Burlington to establish through passenger service to the California metropolis is in line with similar plans carried out by other roads.

THE meeting of the members of Group Five, Illinois, Corn Belt Group, held at Pontiac, June 9th, was well attended and chuck full of interest from the time the smoker was called together at the Elks' Club the evening of the 8th until the last act of the convention on the afternoon of June 9th, when Dr. W. E. Taylor, soil expert for Deere & Company of Moline, finished his splendid address on better farming methods. Brother Durham of Onarga was on hand and successfully launched the official song for Group Five. "Illinois" and "America" were also sung with good effect.

J. H. EDWARDS, vice-president Washington Trust & Savings, Seattle, called on Chicago banking acquaintances June 7th.

L. T. MORRIS, cashier of the Citizens' National, Watertown, S. D., attended the Sioux Falls convention and afterwards traveled into Chicago for a brief business trip, calling on a few of his acquaintances Saturday and returning to Watertown that evening.

C. HELPENSTELL, president of Group One, Illinois, is a poet. Note his announcement of the Moline meeting:

"The Moline bankers have generously consented to entertain us in their progressive city, therefore, our executive council, in its sublime wisdom, has decided to hold our group meeting in that great industrial center on June 27, 1911."

HELPENSTELL "banks" in the rival town of Rock Island and the "sublime wisdom" in reality consisted of accepting Moline's invitation without Moline knowing anything about it. Nelson H. Greene and his friends jumped in and fixed it up so that all who go will be proud of the day.

FURTHER quoting the Rock Island poet: "Let Group One remember its tradition! It was in Moline where the spirit of the group uttered its first feeble cry for modern protection and progressive organization. To honor the day of our birth and to be loyal to our individual interests, it is imperative that we accept the generous invitation tendered us by the Moline bankers to enjoy a most delightful outing on the 'Father of Waters.'"

HERE'S another good outing. Group Three, Wisconsin, will meet at Green Lake, Wednesday and Thursday, June 21st and 22d. Golf, fishing, bathing and oratory, together with a good hotel. Can you beat it? Ernest J. Perry Fond du Lac is president.

THE Bard of Onarga "came back" at the Group Five, Illinois, meeting at Pontiac. He had written a song and with the aid of the delegates it went off like a cannon. The first verse (tune Battle Hymn) ran:

We're here to sing the praises of Group Five of Illinois

The best old group no matter what our sorrows or our joys

We represent the Corn Belt and we're proud to be the boys

Of our great and good Group Five.

GROUP ONE, Indiana, at Fort Wayne, will meet Tuesday June 20th. C. H. Worden, president of the state association, D. B. Johnson of Mooresville, W. G. Edens, Chicago, and D. A. Wasmuth of Roanoke, are the speakers.

A MAN tells us, and he traveled out to South Dakota and back with him, that G. M. Reynolds not once mentioned the Hibernian bank or its absorption by his own, although he talked banking and the National Reserve Association plan the whole way. Mr. Reynolds is a talker from talkerville but when it comes to telling secrets he simply doesn't know how.

GOING to California, just after his biggest consolidation, he predicted the C. & C. would reach $250,000,000 in ten years. In a little less than one year, it hasn't far to go. Isn't Chicago likely to have the first half-billion bank?

"PINCHED for fast driving" was the big head-line in the Clinton, Iowa, paper on Monday and the offender (or victim) was none other than John Fletcher of the Drovers, Chicago. John was en route to the Mason City convention and was in a hurry.

C. B. MILLS and J. H. Ingwersen seemed to have advance information of what is likely to happen to the Fletcher racer, for they were "on hands" to give bonds and enjoy the young financier's discomfiture. Go easy in Clinton!

SECOND NATIONAL, of Bucyrus, Ohio, kept open house in their new bank building, June 10th. The whole town turned out. Bucyrus is one (there must be a dozen) of W. G. Edens home towns. Honest!

The only state convention listed for next week is that of the North Dakota Bankers Association which will be held in Fargo, June 27th and 28th. It is expected that George M. Reynolds of this city will speak on the National Reserve Association plan following much in the same lines that he has adopted before conventions. Secretary MacFadden has secured a large number of prominent speakers and the program calls for a high class of entertainment in a social way. Among those who will address the convention are: J. W. Lusk of St. Paul on "The Reserve Association Plan"; Hon. J. E. Phelan of Bowman (N. D.) on "The Foundation of Confidence"; H. T. Graves of Jamestown (N. D.) on "The Evil Results of Too Much Credit"; W. P. Snyder of Hebron (N. D.) on "Modern Methods of Utilizing North Dakota Lignite Coal"; Senator J. L. Cashel of Grafton (N. D.) on "Banking"; Senator H. H. Steele of Mohall (N. D.) on "Reserve Cities"; Hon. J. N. Kohl of Towner (N. D.) on "Better Examination and Bank Supervision"; Senator J. E. Stevens of Northwood (N. D.) on "Merchants Point of View of Financial Matters"; Senator W. B. Overson of Williston on "Northwestern North Dakota"; T. S. Hunt of LaMoure on "Conservation of the Financial Resources of the Community and the Banks' Relation Thereto"; O. M. Corwin of Minneapolis on "Good Farming and Its Relation to the Bankers of North Dakota."

DAWSON FAVORS BANKING REFORM

A resolution, providing for a more elastic currency system, unity and co-operation among banks, and the unification of bank reserves, was introduced by Hon. A. F. Dawson, president of the First National of Davenport, at the concluding session of the Mason City convention.

Mr. Dawson introduced his resolution after the committee on resolutions had reported without referring to any national currency reform. In a 15 minute speech he argued for the resolution on the floor of the convention and it was finally adopted. It follows:

"Resolved, That we (Iowa Bankers Association) earnestly favor the enactment of legislation that will give the country a permanent currency system which will provide (1) such elasticity as will respond to the varying needs of business at different seasons of the year, and as carefully safeguarded against inflation as against stringency; (2) the association of all banks into a nation-wide system, rather than one of scattered units, to obtain unity and co-operation, and which shall be secure against political domination or the control of concentrated wealth; (3) the unification of bank reserves so that they can, in time of stress, be made available where most needed; together with such other additions as will give the country immunity from the disastrous money panics of the past and assure the transaction of the rapidly increasing business of the nation with safety and security."

A bank has been organized at Rison, Arkansas, with capital stock of $25,000.

Mr. Huntoon has devoted much time to the problems being worked out by the Minnesota Bankers Association. He is a progressive, and has favored, and earnestly worked for, the admirable new laws put on the books by the influence of the association. His annual address in this issue is one of the best papers of the year.

Mr. Wilkinson has been, during his term, a hard worker and in his closing address advocated the preparation of a new banking law by the association forces, to be offered to the legislature. The southern states, under the leadership of such men, will soon have advanced banking laws and safer banking conditions than ever before.

POLITICS TALKED AT BEMIDJI

Bemidji, Minn., June 21.—Carried in special trains of ten Pullman cars, 190 bankers of Minnesota arrived in Bemidji at 6:45 A. M. to-day. Regular trains brought in hundreds of others, so that when the convention was called to order at 9:30, 400 Minnesota men of finance were present. Chief among the visitors were former United States Senator Lafe Young, of Des Moines, who is to speak to-night, and James A. Tawney of Winona, former congressman.

"It is not for me to say whether President Taft can be elected in 1912, but I feel satisfied that he will be nominated," said Mr. Young. Although Mr. Young is opposed to reciprocity, which he says will pass the senate in an unamended form, he still has great confidence in the President.

"The people are going to hesitate before they turn the White House over to the democrats," continued Mr. Young. "They may trust them for a while with the lower house. Woodrow Wilson is a good man, but folks don't think so much of his party."

Mr. Tawney, who never has been in the northern part of the state before, was guarded in his remarks, except so far as they related to the initiative, referendum and recall, on which subject he will address the bankers, condemning these propositions as dangerous to good government.

POSITION OF ILLINOIS BANKS

According to the abstract of the reports of the 544 state banks operating under Illinois charters there has been an increase of upward of $31,000,000 in deposits compared with the returns on 525 banks on March 8th. In this three-month period there has been an increase of upward of $5,000,000 in capital and surplus and undivided profits, while the total cash and due from banks increased $12,358,000 and the percentage of reserves to deposits averages 30.40.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

ONE lone man has made a kick because the New Orleans Train de Luxe isn't going to run through Hoopeton this year. You see, it's this way. The Nashville train ran through Hoopeton and the transportation committee, knowing Who's Who in the Illinois Bankers Association decided to take an occasional train through Onarga. You can't fool that transportation committee.

WE hear that the vendors are after George M. Reynolds. One had Gaelic folk songs and love, another had membership cards in the Clan na Hibernian, and the best of all was a set of disc records containing "Irish in ten lessons," in the true, depositors' brogue.

OWING to a misunderstanding he had with the starting crank of a big six cylinder car, John L. Hamilton, down at Hoopeton, is nursing a broken wrist. Had it been a political machine, and well oiled,—but you see it was different.

MINNEAPOLIS papers are having a lot of fun (new series) over the Taft summer home at Minnetonka yarn, at "Archie" Crane's expense. Crane is so much of a gentleman that he pretends to like it, but he doesn't. Anyhow when it comes to looks, graceful carriage, etc., the chief executive isn't in it with A. A.

NORTH CAROLINA bankers were wise enough to make ten day reservations at Lake Kanuga, including the convention dates. Most of them will remain at the resort from June 19th to the 28th. The convention dates were June 21st-30th.

COMBINED deposits of First National and First Trust at St. Joseph, Mo., are bobbling around four and one-half millions. The affiliated banks offer every form of financial service to customers.

FIRST NATIONAL and its Savings Bank of Peoria, are in their new building. Capital and surplus of the two banks are $1,200,000, with total resources of $7,000,000.

A. V. HUNTER is the new president of the First National, Denver. F. G. Moffatt has been advanced to the vice-presidency and C. S. Houghwaut, cashier.

LOUIS G. KAUFMAN, president of the Chatham and Phenix National, New York, was the first to register at the Detroit convention. He is an ex-president of the Michigan association and president of the First at Marquette. He also is a member of the Big Council for Michigan.

SPEAKING of conditions Mr. Kaufman said that the past six months have been the quietest New York bankers and business men have known since the disturbance of 1907, and that the quiet is likely to continue with little or no expansion in factories, stores, or other enterprises for which business men borrow money.

"BUSINESS is marking time now and it has been for six months," he said. "Merchants and business men are borrowing no money. Investment in bonds has furnished almost the only activity in New York financial circles for a long time. The rate on short time loans has been for some months in the neighborhood of 2 per cent, and that in itself shows that there have been no big investments in stocks."

"GEORGE M. REYNOLDS, ex-secretary of the treasury" is the way the Detroit papers described Chicago's big bank consolidator. The job mentioned wasn't quite to G. M.'s liking.

ROBERT WILLIAM BONYNGE, at the Detroit convention, expressed our sentiments quite neatly. He said: "A mistake was made, I believe, in having Mr. Aldrich formulate and promulgate the reserve association proposal, for so much has been said about him and such an attitude against him among the people created, that his fathering of the reform has been without doubt a detrimental influence."

NEW Michigan officials are C. J. Monroe, Kalamazoo, president; vice-president, B. F. Davis, Lansing; attorney, H. H. Smith, Detroit; treasurer, Benjamin Dansard, Monroe; secretary, Mrs. H. M. Brown, Detroit.

IF you even asked a Michigan banker what he thought about having a woman for secretary you'd be put off the boat. The record made by Mrs. Brown can't be beat by any of the men. She's able, discreet, attentive to duties, doesn't usurp the functions of the committees and officials and the earnings, in proportion to expenses, show her business capacity to be A1. Michigan bankers are loyal to Mrs. Brown.

MICHIGAN decided to admit brokers to membership—those who conduct their business as the bankers think it ought to be done.

WE hear that Judge Montgomery has a constitution, fully twice as large as the Woodruff edition. Hope it isn't a campaign document?

A PIPE-SMOKING proof reader made us say of the young and handsome Homer Miller of Des Moines: "His popularity and influence in the state make him a pioneer in Northwest banking." For "pioneer" read "power" and it will make sense. They can't make the place where most proof readers go too hot for this one.

"ADDRESSES" by John Perrin" is another one 'round the neck of the same goat.

PENNSYLVANIA sentiment at the Philadelphia convention was strong for the reserve association plan.

OFFICERS elected at Philadelphia are president, A. J. Hazeltine of the Warren Savings, Warren, who has been the vice-president of the association; vice-president, A. S. Beymer, cashier of the Keystone National of Pittsburgh and treasurer Horace G. Mitchell of the Peoples National at Langhorne.

THE trust company section of the association elected the following officers: President, C. M. Willock, of the Fidelity Title & Trust Co. of Pittsburgh; secretary, W. A. Wilcox, of the Scranton Trust Co.; treasurer, Robert Wilson, of the Savings & Trust Co. of Indiana, Pa.

MICHIGAN water dogs had a great time on their annual jaunt on the big lakes. On their way from the Detroit convention over to Buffalo, a steam cylinder blew out, and C. Q. D.'s were sent out thick and fast. A rescue without fatalities was effected by a sister ship.

TWO or three years ago the Michigan bankers, on one of their annual tours went aground on a barren island. But you can't stop them. "Commodore" Livingstone has them too well broken in.

ANDREW SMITH, secretary for Indiana, is a useful secretary far beyond the common. He prepares and sends out the group programs and later sends separate and well prepared accounts of the meetings to all the financial papers. You see he's just a first class secretary and not a "distinguished visitor" at the groups.

OF COURSE, we've often told you of the pikers and "vice-presidents" with their traveling companions, who go out for certain New York financial papers. Well, even at home they're catching on, and eventually they will be almost as wise as western bankers who read this column and pretty nearly know who's who in that line.

SECRETARY WILLIAM J. HENRY has decided, so far as the New York association is concerned, to put an end to certain abuses, such as crowding the banquet table with undesirable persons, is concerned.

SECRETARY HENRY has issued one card to each financial paper in his diocese and the "privileges" will be extended only to those having such credentials. Even at the council banquets of the A. B. A. the "vice-presidents" and their friends are the first to go in. They rush the door, just as they did at Nashville, at Briarcliff and at Atlantic City.

M. HENRY in explaining his new system of beating the deadbeats says: "Former experiences render it advisable to protect ourselves and the real financial papers against individuals representing themselves as connected with their offices." There you have it officially. The commission solicitors and hold-ups are to be flagged.

IN OUR modest opinion Col. Farnsworth should issue some such advanced credentials to the right persons and at banquets, boat and automobile rides stop those who have no rights.

EVEN "receptions" held at private houses, dances and the like, have been mercilessly invaded by these impostors.

Progress in Banking

Jos. T. Talbert, of New York, eloquently reviews our advances before Manhattan Beach convention

Quite a tribute was paid Jos. T. Talbert, late of Chicago, but now a vice-president of an important New York bank, in giving him the place of honor on the program for the New York bankers convention at Manhattan Beach. Mr. Talbert represented the metropolitan district and did it very ably. "Progress in Banking" was the assigned topic and the improved and amended National Reserve Association plan, in prospective, was given the place of honor. Mr. Talbert eloquently and unreservedly indorsed it and called upon the convention as a whole to do the same.

Continuing Mr. Talbert said:

We pass now to other steps of progress which have been made in banking in recent years. The review not only is encouraging, but the outlook is hopeful. The first important and decisive step was taken by the clearing house banks of the city of Chicago (at W. T. Fenton's suggestion—Ed.) after the failure of the Chicago National Bank and its allied trust company and savings bank, in instituting a system of examinations of the members of the clearing house under the authority of the clearing house association. Suddenly and without warning the associated banks of Chicago were confronted by the necessity of assuming and paying on demand the liabilities of a member bank amounting to more than twenty million dollars, and taking over its assets of unknown or indeterminate value, on the one hand; or of suffering the humiliation, on the other hand, of permitting a member whose business was large and important to fail, and consequently to incur criticism and possibly public distrust and discredit of the banking methods of all the other members. They wisely chose the former course, and paid the creditors of the failed bank in full. It was a costly experience. True to human nature, they proceeded then securely to lock the doors against contingencies of that character in the future. They engaged a competent man to examine frequently and thoroughly the members of the clearing house and all banks clearing through the members. The purpose of this was to keep the committee fully advised as to the actual condition and as to the character of the assets of every member of the association and of all outlying banks enjoying through the members the privileges of clearing. This scheme was in time adopted by the banks in a number of other cities, in more or less modified forms; and it has recently been voted upon and adopted, and shortly will be established and made effective, among the banks in New York City. The subcommittee appointed by the clearing house committee to investigate and report upon the practicability of establishing a system of clearing house examinations among the banks in New York City found to their great satisfaction that wherever in any city such a system has been installed it has been successful beyond all expectations. Banking conditions have been greatly improved; mutual confidence of local bankers in one another has been established, and in every instance the members themselves and those clearing through them are thoroughly satisfied, and none was found willing to abandon the practice of having their own examinations.

It may not be inopportune to point out here, and to make clear not only to you as bankers but to the depositing public, especially of this community, that in adopting a system of self-inspection a clearing house does not at all undertake to guarantee the soundness of the assets nor to insure the correct conduct of the business of the members. All responsibility in that respect is expressly disclaimed; but it is not too much to say that it is believed and expected, in view of the satisfactory experiences elsewhere, that under the plan of self-examination shortly to be established in New

JOS. T. TALBERT
Vice-President National City Bank, New York

York City it will be possible to maintain a condition of soundness and liquidness among the members, not possible without it. That the result in the end will be most beneficial to the banks themselves and satisfactory to the public is not to be doubted. It is a long step and one which has been wisely and carefully taken towards the insurance of good, sound and safe banking in this community. The clearing house committee which accomplished it, and especially its chairman who initiated it, deserve the thanks no less of this community than of the whole country. No less do they deserve public thanks for bringing into the clearing house and placing under examination and control the trust companies of New York. The ultimate benefit of this to the people of the city and of the whole country scarcely could be overestimated. It is one of the wisest and most important steps yet accomplished.

I wish again, however, to emphasize the fact, and to direct especial attention to it, that no system of examinations or of supervision under clearing house authority or any other authority can prevent acts of bad judgment or of dishonesty, nor can they prevent occasional failures of banks. Let no one be deceived on this point. But clearing house examinations wherever introduced and efficiently administered can and will by their restraining influences, reduce those evils to a minimum and prevent any general condition of unsoundness or of bad banking to prevail, just as certainly as modern sanitation, isolation and health inspection may be depended upon to prevent the serious spread of contagious diseases. An occasional death may occur, but there can be no epidemic.

The next important step has been the general elevation to a higher plane of the methods and management of national banks throughout the country. This has been accomplished through the persistent and determined efforts of the comptroller of the currency. He has brought it about in the first case by dropping out of the service all incompetent examiners and by insisting upon thorough and efficient work. Fitness and capability have been the necessary qualifications of his examiners. He has divided the United States into a number of districts, in each of which he has appointed an examiner to be chairman, and he requires the examiners in each district to hold meetings from time to time to compare notes and mutually to give and receive the benefits of experience. He has appointed examiners-at-large, and has himself gone out into the field and worked with the examiners, assisting, advising and instructing them in the details of their work, and determining from personal observation those who are fittest. He has brought about co-operation in nearly all the states between his office and the state banking departments and between his examiners and state bank examiners, so that there is no longer that feeling of jealousy between them which existed in former years. He has also made it possible to have allied state and national banks examined simultaneously, and has in every possible way encouraged and promoted co-operation between his office and that of the state banking department. He has caused his examiners to bring directly to the attention of the directors of a bank under examination all matters and things subject to criticism or unfavorable comment. The effect of this has been highly beneficial to the banks. He has eliminated dishonest bank managers and officers whenever and wherever he has found them and through these and numerous other similar measures he has done much to improve the condition of the national banks of the country and to place them upon a sounder basis than they have ever been. Ninety-five per cent of the criticism, technical and otherwise, heretofore found necessary, has been dispensed with, and he has publicly stated that practically every national bank in the United States now is in a satisfactory condition. The few which are not are subject to the strictest supervision. This is saying a good deal, but it is as it should be. He has put a stop to the operations of bank promoters and has declined to give charters to persons of ill repute, or to any person who has been associated either with a state or national bank in the past which failed. For all these things, and for others which he has in contemplation, it is not too much to say that he has done more to elevate the standard of banking and to improve the efficiency of bank examinations and the character of bank management, both state and national, than any and all comptrollers who have preceded him. He recently has given a conspicuous example of personal sacrifice to public duty, and for this as well as for the other things he has done, he deserves the thanks, the confidence and the lasting gratitude of every banker, business man and bank depositor in the United States. Probably the most important progressive move he yet has made, among many which stand out conspicuously, is the effort he is now making to induce the banks in every reserve city of the United States to employ their own examiners. Not only does he not discourage the newly-discovered system of self-inspection among clearing house banks, but he is big enough to encourage and to help along the movement to the point of insisting upon it, and even to the extent of proposing to allow his own well-trained and most experienced men to make examinations for clearing house committees in the smaller cities (of course, at their own expense) where it would be impracticable on account of the greater expense to maintain a competent private examiner. You gentlemen, as bankers, whether your banks are located in reserve cities or not, and the bankers of the whole country, should support Comptroller Murray in this important and courageous stand, not only by your voices, but by your actions in showing preference in the designation of your reserve agents to banks located in those cities which accept and conscientiously enforce this modern, wholesome and effective measure of reform. It is to be hoped that bankers everywhere will do so, and that the banks in at least every reserve city may thereby be obliged to adopt it. It is difficult to imagine how any reserve city can long stand out against it because it marks progress, and is a real, vital and very necessary reform.

Now we come to a review of the final and most important of all the steps in banking progress which in this generation we shall be called upon to take. I refer, of course, to the enactment of a law along the lines proposed to the National Monetary Commission which shall create and establish a permanent and adequate banking system in the United States. Of all the experiences of the panic, bitter and costly as some of them were, perhaps the most needed and effective was the proof it afforded that strength and safety are to be found in combination. It proved also that although our system may be good enough in normal times, it is a failure in times of panic, because every unit among thousands in the system is compelled at the expense of every other unit to shift for itself; and to fight for its life and safety, regardless of the welfare of others. It was demonstrated that wherever three or four banks (even though they were small and weak), were gathered together in the name of a "clearing house association," they could, in this combination of reserves, find not only strength and safety for themselves, but help for their customers and for the communities which they served, by giving mutual support to one another. In effect this meant the "pooling of their reserve cash" for mutual benefit. If this can be done safely even in small communities where only a few banks are involved, how much more safe and effective might the combination of all the banks of the whole country be made through the agency of the proposed National Reserve Association. The protective and defensive strength of such an organization is nearly incalculable.

The general terms of the plan undoubtedly are familiar to you, and I shall not discuss them, but I may say that if and when it is enacted into law it would accomplish among other things the following objects, which are necessary for our own protection and essential to the achievement and maintenance of our proper position financially and commercially among the enlightened and progressive nations:

1. The centralization of the cash reserves of the nation, which in this central reserve association would become by far the greatest and most effective stock of gold in the world.

2. The eventual abandonment of our inelastic and unscientific bond-secured circulating notes.

3. The establishment of a discount system which will utilize the merchant loans and give to them immediate debt-paying power. It will thus vitalize the current credits of trade, which constitute the safest and soundest basis for bank note issues.

4. The absolute and automatic adjustment of volume of note issues to fluctuating business demands and to the temporary seasonal needs.

5. The conversion of the public debt from a false and fictitious basis to an investment basis, without loss to the government and without cost to the people. In this respect the proposal is a marvel of ingenuity as well as of simplicity.

6. It will secure to the country all the advantages of a great central bank of discount for all banks, without the disadvantages of government competition in banking and without the fear of political entanglements or of control by any financial group or set of interests. In this respect the proposed organization is admirable and beyond criticism.

7. It will conduct the fiscal affairs of the government without the locking up of money in the treasury at critical times to the embarrassment of banks and to the inconvenience of business.

8. The people, through the government, will share the profits of carrying on this business, which will be done with no liability to the government, no cost to it, nor any chance of loss.

9. The equalization of interest rates, the extension of discount privileges, and the ability to procure notes when needed by the banks in every section of the United States alike.

10. The ability to meet any sudden or unexpected strain upon the credits or reserves of this country, whether arising internally or by reason of failures, wars or other disasters in foreign countries.

11. The association would possess all the strength and advantages of a branch bank system in its responsiveness to local needs, coupled with the greater advantage of having local interest and sympathy in the banks and of local control of each unit, which the branch bank system does not possess.

12. It would secure to a certain extent the unification of our state and national banking systems, through their common interest in and joint ownership of the central reserve association, and through the granting and extension to all classes of banking institutions, equal privileges, opportunities and advantages of stockholding and in dealing with the National Reserve Association, without impairing the rights of any class. It seems in this respect that when the diversified interests of our country are taken into account, and the number of states, each with its own system of banks, is considered, that the limit of ingenuity has been reached, and that nothing better, fairer or more comprehensive could be proposed.

13. The bed rock of soundness in banking is the ability of the banks to maintain cash payments. Through the power of the central reserve association to issue notes to banks in any community against the discount of their shortly maturing mercantile paper, the natural fear which every banker now has of being unable at times to procure the required notes will be removed, and there will remain no necessity of any bank hoarding an abnormal amount of cash reserve even in stringent times. This eliminates the underlying cause of that particularly aggravating trouble known as a "bankers' panic." Such panics nearly always end in more or less complete suspension of cash payments and result in the collapse of trade.

14. Through its power to raise and lower discount rates, a power which is now wisely used by such banks as the Bank of England and the Bank of France for the protection of their reserves, as well as for the benefit of the trade of their respective countries, the reserve association could and would protect our national stock of gold, which at present is wholly unprotected. This unprotected condition has subjected the business interests of our country many times to grave and unnecessary perils. It is not saying too much to assert that the inability of our treasury, and of the banks as independent units, to protect our gold stock, has cost this country more than the total amount of our national debt.

15. Through its power to purchase and accumulate international bills of exchange, and to sell them or to sell its own bills when exports of gold were threatened, and to hold such bills when the importation of gold became necessary or desirable, the Central Reserve Association would achieve an international position worthy of itself as a bank. It would compel the great banks of all other important countries to recognize it eventually as one of the most powerful factors in the world's commerce and one whose influence must always be taken into account.

16. The reserve association as proposed would not be an excrescence upon the national banking system; not merely an agency of discount for the national banks; but it would accomplish by legal organization, for the benefit of the public, normally, continuously and cheaply, what the banks have been obliged in a way to accomplish for themselves at great cost in times of distress through their clearing house organizations without possessing the equipment for it. I mean the unloosening, the quickening into life of the short-time mercantile credits which are locked up in the portfolios of banks, or lying dormant upon merchants' (Continued on page 18)

J. B. FORGAN TO CREDIT MEN

James B. Forgan, president of the First National of Chicago, gave the principal address at the meeting of the National Association of Credit Men at Minneapolis, last week.

He said the United States has no banking system worthy of the name and favored the adoption of the plan to establish a national reserve association in which banks belonging to local associations shall be stockholders and through which the banking system will secure the benefits of the branch plan.

Other subjects considered by delegates were adjustment bureau ethics, credit department methods, and co-operative retail credit reporting. Growth of local adjustment bureaus into sectional and national bureaus was predicted.

ILLINOIS GROUP MEETINGS

The members of Group Three met at DeKalb, June 21st and the members of Group Two at Peoria the 22d. The members of Group One will meet at Moline June 27th. Dr. W. E. Taylor, soil expert for Deere and Company, will fire the heavy artillery in a speaking way. The members of Group Four will meet at Evanston in the Patten Gymnasium, June 29th. Luncheon served at the gymnasium, a few short talks furnished by the membership of the group, autoing and golf will be the order of the day. This completes the group work for Illinois this year.

Wm. T. Abbott, vice-president Central Trust Company, attended the Peoria group meeting on the 22d. Mr. Abbott formerly was a resident of Peoria, having been a member of the old Peoria law firm of Stevens, Horton and Abbott, and this is his first appearance at a Peoria bankers meeting since his advent in the banking business, now more than a year ago.

THE NORTHERN NATIONAL OF DULUTH

The Northern National Bank of Duluth with a capital of $250,000 is making rapid gains. The president, J. L. Washburn, and J. W. Lyder, Jr., cashier, are interested in convention work and the bank was well represented at the Bemidji convention. Its statement issued at the close of business on June 7th shows that the bank has doubled its business since moving into its new and up-to-date quarters.

KASPAR STATE INCREASES CAPITAL

Stockholders of the Kaspar State Bank have authorized an increase in the capital of the institution from $200,000 to $400,000. The new stock is to be issued to present stockholders on July 1st at $125 a share. Out of its present surplus and undivided profits the bank will pay an extra dividend of something more than $70 a share, however, so that the real cost of the new stock will be between $50 and $55 a share.

On June 8th the bank reported a surplus of $150,000 and net undivided profits of $43,500, a total of $193,500. It is the intention to distribute all but $50,000 of this amount to stockholders. After July 1st the bank will have $400,000 capital and $100,000 surplus.

OFF TO BEMIDJI

J. W. Thomas, assistant cashier, Central Trust Company, left for Minneapolis Monday night to join the bankers who will travel by special train to Bemidji, Brainerd and International Falls for the annual convention of the Minnesota Bankers Association.

The North Penn Bank (Philadelphia) proposes to increase its capital to $150,000.

Banking Not Private Business

President J. W. Miles tells Maryland bankers at Deere Park, that his State needs better bank supervision and lauds the New York law

We are met to-day in our sixteenth annual convention, under auspices most inspiring, in the midst of an enchanting natural environment, surrounded by conditions highly provocative of good cheer and a renewal of energies, and well calculated to make this meeting one of the most eventful in all the splendid history of this association. I congratulate you upon the outlook, and in behalf of the administration committee and our always diligent and faithful secretary and treasurer, I heartily thank you for ratifying our choice of this beautiful Maryland mountain resort, as our place of meeting, by an excellent if not unusual attendance upon this our opening session.

I was not a little surprised, in my investigation, during the past year, of the law defining the duties of bank officers, preparatory to the trial of an interesting case in one of our state courts, to find that while usage, by-laws or directorial votes, may confer upon him special functions, a bank president has inherently or by virtue of his office, but one power beyond that of any other director in his bank. This one function is to take charge of the litigation of the bank. More recently, after nearly a year's incumbency of the office, in reflecting upon the subject, I reached the conclusion that while the position is one of great dignity and honor the solitary function inherent in the office of president of the Maryland Bankers

Association, is to deliver what is called in your order of business, "The President's Annual Address."

In view of the excellent suggestions in past addresses of this kind, in view of what this association already has wrought, and in general terms, my advice is: Continue your efforts to elevate the standards of banking in Maryland. The Maryland Bankers Association enjoys the unique distinction of having, at some sacrifice and at no little cost, procured the passage of a law establishing a state banking department and providing for the better regulation of state banks, from a strangely unwilling and for some time, persistently hostile general assembly. This law secured, as I say, solely because of our efforts, is a comprehensive measure, but embodies after all, only such carefully considered and important provisions for the regulation of banks and banking in our state, as were imperatively demanded by the experience of the banking world, and as had existed for years in the banking laws of all the great states of the union. I therefore make bold to say to you, fellow bankers of Maryland, after much study and mature reflection upon the subject, that the legislation, which this very important act provides, although a long step forward, and furnishing many of the more important and well recognized safeguards, is nevertheless, exceedingly conservative; while reflecting great credit upon this association, in the full light of the history of its passage, is not yet that absolutely strong and safe bulwark, against unsafe and reckless banking, which under the direction of our efficient state bank commissioner, it should be our aim and purpose to construct. Unless I mistake the signs of the times, it behooves all progressive bankers associations, like our own, and bankers everywhere owe it to themselves, to be alert, diligent and zealous in their efforts to improve banking methods and to encourage all proper legislation looking to the improvement and final perfecting of the best possible system of effective regulation and supervision.

I would not be querulous or hypercritical in anything I may have to say to the members of this association. On the contrary, I am proud of the record which the Maryland Bankers Association has made; I glory in her achievements already wrought and exult in the fact that the whole history of banking in Maryland, not only reflects credit upon the citizenship of our state, but constitutes one of the brightest chapters in all the annals of American banking.

Having said this much in special praise of our history, I shall make bold, however, to further say that there is just one error quite too common to the banking fraternity: one blunder, I respectfully submit, into which some of those who have addressed the convention of the American Bankers Association, or who have written treatises in our defense in the great magazines and periodicals of the country, have been too prone to fall. It is this. We have gone too far, in our efforts to prevent unnecessary, unwise or harsh legislation, when we have denounced such legislation as attempts to interfere with "the private business" of the citizen and to regulate without right, his "personal affairs." When we go so far, we overlook the fact that the American bank is something more than the ordinary commercial house or place of barter and trade. I prefer to think that it is, and in fact, it is, in a certain sense, a public institution, and the American banker, whether he be bank president, cashier or director, is employed in a very large sense in a position of public trust.

Governor Woodrow Wilson, in his great address before the American Bankers Association in convention at Denver, in 1908, said that it was "the business of the banker to make the right impression and give the right instruction to the people of this country," and I go one step farther and say that it is the business, and should be recognized as the highest duty of American bankers to take the lead, as this Maryland Bankers Association has done, to constitute themselves public servants, in promoting all proper efforts to so regulate banking by legal enactment or otherwise, as to promote the interests of the country, the general welfare of all the people, the "public interests."

Dr. Wheeler, president of the University of California, speaking last year to the American Bankers Association, said that "the American banker has gone much farther than the English or German banker, in adopting the point of view of the public" and in learning "the needs and demands of those who stand outside the pale." I sincerely trust that this great scholar and university man has discovered the truth, because this way lies the path of honor and "by this sign, we conquer."

But I am indulging too much, I fear, in generalization, and whilst shrinking from the responsibility involved in specific recommendations, I cannot resist the temptation, which this occasion offers, to urge upon this association, the importance of following up the excellent work we have already accomplished, looking to the safeguarding of banking in our state, by securing the amendments to our present banking act, suggested by Bank Commissioner Downs, in his first annual report to the governor. I am especially solicitous that our present law should be so amended as to increase the supervisory power of the bank commissioner. After careful consideration and study of the subject, I have reached the conclusion, that there is a serious lack of proper supervisory powers over state banking institutions, in the act of 1910. That act contains provisions for dealing with delinquent or insolvent banks, which in other states, have been found to be wholly inadequate. Section 9 of the act, for instance, requires, that, if upon examination, the bank commissioner finds a banking institution insolvent or in such a condition as to render the continuance of its business hazardous to the public, he shall report the same to the governor, who, after advising with the attorney-general, may institute such proceedings against the delinquent institution, as he may deem proper.

Section 60 provides, that any banking institution, doing business, under the act, may, by action of its board of directors, place its affairs and assets under the control of the bank commissioner.

These provisions may have been the best we could obtain from the general assembly of 1910; they may have been the best we could secure in view of the insistence upon conservative regulations on the part of some of the banking fraternity of our state, in past years, but surely not much discussion should be

NEWS LETTER By Mortimer I. Stevens

WISCONSIN

It is interesting to note the great variety of opinions voiced by the officers of prominent manufacturing institutions and bankers in regard to both the financial and industrial situation as relating to Milwaukee and the state at large. A summing up of these various opinions spells "Optimism" in capital letters though some of the individual expressions have a tinge of pessimism.

In the iron and steel trades there has been a notable dullness thus far this season though it is claimed that indications are now good for the fall trade and that many large users of structural iron and steel who have been holding off with their orders are now coming into the market. The leather trade, which represents a large part of Milwaukee industries, has held about normal with fall orders showing well. Smaller manufacturers—chiefly those manufacturing staple lines—report a good trade.

Among the banks there is a slight tendency to increase in loans since the statement of June 7th with rates normal. Money is plentiful and collections show some improvement over the past few weeks. Bond trade continues good with demand chiefly centering around the higher grades, a good movement being reported in railroad securities.

Guaranty Bill is Killed in Senate

By a tie vote the state guaranty of bank deposits bill has failed in the Wisconsin senate and it is now up to the people of the state whether the legislature shall establish a system of mutual insurance of bank deposits under state supervision, or not.

Senator Owen made a strong fight for the bill saying: "I am here to plead for the weak, for the general depositors and for the great mass of the people. There is another measure before this legislature to allow state banks to secure the United States government so that they may receive postal savings funds. I am utterly opposed to that proposition. I do not believe the best assets of a bank should be segregated at the expense of the poor individual depositor to secure the great and powerful federal government."

Mr. Owen spoke of the good (?) the state bank guaranty law had accomplished in Oklahoma. State Senator Husting also spoke for the bill which he said meant absolute protection of the working men and farmers and other small depositors who place their money in banks. Senator Teasdale, who is a banker, favored the bill. The measure was opposed by Senator Whitehead. He challenged the statement that the law has accomplished good in Oklahoma and referred to a letter he had received from the comptroller of currency relative to the large number of banks in Oklahoma which were applying for federal charters.

The first question voted on was the amendment, No. 15. This was rejected by a vote of 15 to 13. Senator Husting said he had voted for the rejection of the amendment because he felt the bill had no chance of passage at this session. He therefore voted the reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

It was taken that this move was meant to kill the bill completely for this session. This, however, was farthest from the thought of the conspirators. They had measured the strength of the two sides and saw they could turn the tables. The vote on reconsideration was, much to the surprise of every one, 14 to 13. The substitute amendment was then adopted by the same vote.

The impression had prevailed that being a bank bill it would require a two-thirds vote to pass and it was not until the bill was passed that those opposed woke up to the fact that the amendment had completely changed the character of the bill and that they had been voting on a proposition to submit a question to the people which could be carried by majority vote.

The amendment will be placed before the assembly within a few days and its passage by that body is almost assured.

A large attendance is assured as the majority of those who attend the group meeting at Green Lake the latter part of this week will wait over for the Waupaca meeting.

An excellent program has been prepared with a wide variation of subjects, as follows:

necessary, to convince this body of enlightened Maryland bankers, that such provisions are utterly lacking in real effectiveness, to say nothing of their liability to cause unnecessary delay and expense.

Other statutes of the state, I submit, already have given too many duties of a supervisory and extra-constitutional kind to the governor of Maryland, but if this be not admitted, the testimony of advanced exponents of public opinion in the banking world, and of experienced leaders and directors of banking and business interests in the state of New York, since the passage of the act of 1908, by the great Empire State, should convince us that the public needs, as well as our own highest and best interests, require that the bank commissioner should be vested with full authority to close any banking corporation, doing business in this state, and immediately take charge of its property and affairs, not only when such corporation is insolvent, but whenever he may find such corporation is conducting its business in an unsafe or unauthorized manner, provided, in the latter case, the institution be given, by law, full opportunity to show cause why the unlawful or unsafe practices should not be discontinued.

To be still more specific, I see no reason why the New York act of 1908, placing in the hands of the superintendent of banks, the same power with reference to delinquent state banking institutions as are given to the comptroller of the currency, with relation to national banks, should not prove wise legislation for the regulation of state banks in Maryland.

Maryland bankers, like all other citizens of Maryland, are proverbially conservative, and we may not yet be quite ready for this progressive legislation, but I insist such legislation will come, and will be incorporated into the laws of Maryland, just as soon as Maryland state bankers reach that stage in the development of their high calling, when they realize, as in time we surely will, that the very best conception of the business of the banker, is that of an honorable public servant, engaged in a great public trust.

I have ventured upon these suggestions and recommendations, fellow bankers, not only because I believe there is urgent necessity for the specific banking regulations suggested, but for the much broader reason, that I believe it behooves bankers, of all the men in the business community, to take a leading part in the present day movement everywhere evident, to secure to the masses of the people, fair and honest treatment by all the big business interests of the country.

After all, this is the one idea which I had intended should constitute the key-note of my official message—the idea that the American banker has not risen to that lofty and ideal point of view which it should be his highest ambition and constant aim to attain, until he has entirely discarded the notion that his business is a "private business," and stands squarely, cheerfully and proudly at the "point of view of the public." When the great army of American bankers has climbed to this height, then and not till then, will we be able to solve many difficulties, which now seem to overtax and baffle our best energies. Then, in my judgment, will cease the many bad practices, incident to unwise competition for business, now all too common, but difficult to regulate by law. The hunt for deposits will no longer be carried to excess. Improper inducements will no longer be held out to prospective customers. We shall resist, without difficulty, the temptation to pay excessive interest rate on business. Liberal overdrafts will be outlawed in the tribunal of our own consciences. All these questionable practices, which good bankers usually admit to be sources of danger, will seem more fraught with peril, and easier to resist, when we are panoplied against temptation, by an ever present thought and concern for "those outside the pale."

I fear that I am breaking the record in making this address too long. My apology must be that the more I learn of the banker's business the more zealous I become in advocacy of every practice, regulation or safeguard, looking to the protection of the public interests, involved in our business, because I believe that such a policy on our part, tends to bring bankers in closer touch with the people, and to draw away the public mind from the old idea, that the banker is the personification of sordid selfishness, and utterly lacking in sympathy with the public welfare.

I thank you gentlemen for the cordial support you have given my administration, during the past year, and again I desire to extend to you all, my most cordial felicitations.

Southwestern reserve city news and gossip
—Special correspondence concerning also
the tributary territory, by J. Vion Papin

St. Louis, June 21.—Bankers here report a gradual hardening in money rates. During the last two weeks the average has gone up about one-half of 1 per cent, and the quotable range is now between $4\frac{1}{2}$ and $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. the demand from all sources is picking up, and most improvement is from the country. Shipments to the interior, however, have been rather light for this season, this despite the earliness of the wheat harvest. Thus far the agricultural needs have been handled by country banks with their funds at hand, without being obliged to draw heavily on latent resources at reserve centers. All the leading banks here are abundantly supplied with cash, and never in their history were in better shape to handle the demands which are bound to develop within the next few months. While the early outlook for crops has not borne out, and much disappointment is felt because of the drought, there will still be an enormous production in cereals and other lines. In this region a dry June rarely results disastrously to corn, some of the largest crops having been grown with little or no moisture in that month. The corn acreage is enormous, and while the government report will doubtless show a poor initial condition, there is time for improvement, and the law of average, as applied to rainfall, will insure ample moisture during the balance of the growing period. Clearings have been showing up in excellent shape, the total this week and last being well in excess of the corresponding period a year ago. General business is fairly active.

Shipments to Arkansas

A feature which will affect reserves here during the next month or two will be shipments of cash to Arkansas for taxes. The laws of that state provide that the banks and trust companies must pay their taxes in cash. These payments begin July 1st, and continue into August. All this enormous sum is placed in the vaults of the state, where it lies idle, until sometime in September, when it begins to work back into the channels of circulation. The last legislature changed this law, so that the situation is helped somewhat. The change provided that immediately upon payment, the taxes must be deposited by the state treasurer back in banks in districts from which they are paid. While this affords some relief, the provision does not become effective until next summer. It can be imagined what havoc this old law might work in time of financial stress and cash scarcity.

Charles H. Huttig Equal to the Occasion

Charles H. Huttig, president of the Third

National of St. Louis and chairman of the executive council of the American Bankers Association, was cast in a big mould. For rising to big situations he possesses ability easily in the genius class. Last week his establishment, the Huttig Sash and Door Company, was consumed in a $700,000 fire. Mr. Huttig arrived at the fire in his motor almost before the lines of the fire department were in full play. Personally he directed efforts of employees and others in saving books and records, and only backed away when the heat became too great even for trained fire fighters to stay. Then he went to the Manchester Bank, near the scene, and there got together the directors of the sash company, and by light of the flames planned and mapped a full campaign for continuing the business. Salesmen on the road were wired to continue taking orders, and contracts made with other concerns for finishing work under way. Orders for new material were placed, and finally it was decided to rebuild on a larger scale. Dawn mixed with the light from the great fire before the meeting adjourned, but more had been accomplished than weeks of deliberation would have produced under a less commanding mentality. It is a good thing to have men of this size.

Savings Deposits Data

Persons with savings deposits in St. Louis banks and trust companies will receive approximately $1,133,644 in interest on their funds this month. Total savings deposits in the various financial institutions here aggregate $65,855,967. Estimating the population of St. Louis proper at 750,000, the savings deposits are $87.80 per capita. The deposits for which savings accounts books have been issued aggregate $22,556,325. The deposits represented by interest-bearing certificates amount to $43,299,642, making a grand total of $65,855,967. The interest ranges from 3 to 4 per cent, and according to a reliable average rate, the interest on savings deposits amount to $375,901 for six months, while the interest on certificates of deposit for the same time is $757,743. Figuring on a basis of 3.5 per cent as an average, which is about as near as can be estimated, the interest on all savings in the local banks and trust companies amounts to $1,152,479 for the past six months. The per capita of savings deposits is about as high now as at any time in recent years in St. Louis.

Cities Service Stock Listed

Stock of the Cities Service Company, a corporation similar in many respects in scope, objects, and charter, to the North American Co., has been listed for trade on the St. Louis Stock Exchange. The total authorized capital is $50,000,000, but only $8,565,380 of preferred and $4,838,690 of common, the amount so far issued, was listed. That it is the plan to press sale of this stock in St. Louis is indicated by the fact that F. W. Roberts has been appointed local representative, and opened offices in the Third National Bank Building. The company operates plants in Southwest Missouri and Kansas, Denver, Colorado, and Spokane, Wash. Henry L. Doherty and Company of New York are the promoters.

Macon Bank Suspension

Advices from Macon, Mo., are to the effect that depositors of the Citizens Bank, which closed its doors last week, will pay all stockholders in full. The total deposits are only $150,000, and these, it is stated, are more than covered by the assets. Stockholders, however, are likely to be losers, as efforts made to reorganize and resume business have not thus far met with much success. Missouri bank examiners are in charge, but full details as to the cause of the suspension have not been made public.

Big Realty Company Launched

The Monward Realty Company has been incorporated by persons connected with the Commonwealth Trust Company, to engage in an important building enterprise, which is understood to be the erection of a skyscraper on the site of the Commonwealth's present quarters at Broadway and Olive Street, one of the most valuable corners in St. Louis. A big building on this site has been under consideration for several years. The new company is incorporated for $2,500,000, fully paid. The incorporators are: B. H. Spencer, H. C. White, Mark U. Boyer, H. C. Rueppel and Henry Dreyer, who hold 5,000 shares each. Most of the incorporators are employees of the Commonwealth Trust Company. President A. N. Heavy Fire Losses

Three big fires last week in as many nights resulted in a loss to the insurance companies of something over $1,250,000. The loss for the first half of the present year is well in excess of premiums, and it is likely the fire insurance companies with risks in St. Louis will end 1911 with heavy losses. The Huttig Sash and Door Company, of which Charles H. Huttig, president of the Third National is head, represented the largest loss, that company having $617,000 in policies, all of which will be collected, as there was no salvage. According to C. H. Henley, chief of the St. Louis Fire Prevention Bureau, the record of eight years shows a moderate fire ratio for this city. Last year the ratio was 41 per cent on total premiums of $3,100,000. It has ranged between 35 and 40 per cent since 1902, making St. Louis a profitable center for fire companies. Based on the receipts for the first six months the ratio is more than 125 per cent, and it ran about 50 per cent up to June 1st.

To Handle Bakery Consolidation

The General Banking Company of Woodbury, N. Y., which will in a few days take over the management of the McKinney Bread Company, the St. Louis factor in the new bakery trust, has obtained a license to do business in the state of Missouri. The company, in making application for a license, complied with all requirements of the anti-trust statutes of the state.

Justice Tempered with Mercy

William Hasey, formerly teller of the Mercantile Trust Company, who pleaded guilty to forgery in the fourth degree, was sentenced to a year's imprisonment, but on recommendation of the officials of the Mercantile Trust Company was paroled. Hasey had been a faithful employee of the company for more than fourteen years, and his peculation was attributed to family troubles and the fact that he suffered from tuberculosis. Fellow employees assisted him in making restitution.

State Bank Commissioner Swanger on Monday issued a charter to the Bank of Stoutland, in Camden county. The capital stock of the new bank is $10,000. Among the incorporators are mentioned Fred L. FIRST TRUST ADDS SPACE

The growth of its trust business has compelled the First Trust and Savings Bank of this city to prepare new and enlarged quarters for its trust department, located on the street floor at the northeast corner of the First National Bank Building, with a direct entrance on Dearborn Street and entrances from the bond and savings departments and the lobby of the building. This new space, occupying nearly the entire north half of the Dearborn Street side of the building, has been arranged and equipped with every modern facility for the transaction of trust business and the convenience and comfort of the bank's customers. The lobby and customers' waiting room of the new department are fitted in marble and bronze and the officers' quarters and customers' consultation room in mahogany.

The growth of trust business in Chicago is well illustrated in the case of the First Trust and Savings Bank. Its trust department was started at the time of the bank's organization in 1903, but soon outgrew its quarters and several years ago required the enlargement of the banking offices for its accommodation. It was thought at that time the new space would be sufficient to accommodate its needs for a number of years, but the large and varied business of a fiduciary character entrusted to it has necessitated the present removal of this department.

Lacey, Tootle-Lemon National Bank, St. Joseph; P. W. Goebel, Commercial National Bank, Kansas City, Kan.; E. F. Swinney, First National Bank, Kansas City, Mo.; J. W. Peary, Commerce Trust Company; F. Rain in Texas

Reports from Fort Worth, Tex., state that rain has fallen over a radius of 300 miles in each direction from that city varying in amount from one-half to two inches. This precipitation will save the corn crop in that territory which had been practically given up as lost.

Mortgage Filed

A mortgage signed by the Kansas Natural Gas Company is being filed in the Kansas counties through which the lines of that company run. The mortgage is in favor of the Fidelity Title and Trust Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., and is for $4,000,000 in the form of 4,000 bonds of $1,000 each. The bonds run for twelve years drawing six per cent. They cover by a special mortgage all the property of which the company may become possessed during the life of the loan.

Increased Capital

A statement of increase of capital stock of the Ozark Power and Water Company has been filed with the secretary of the state of Missouri. This is the company organized to develop water power in the rivers of the southwestern part of Missouri. The increase in capital is from $5,000 to $875,000 and this action is taken to mean that it will immediately take steps to acquire and develop water power by constructing dams on the James and other rivers tributary to the White River.

To Issue Bonds

The Public Utilities Commission of Kansas has given a certificate of authority to the Manhattan Interurban Company to issue $200,000 in bonds for the purpose of constructing an electric line from Manhattan to Fort Riley, Kan. A similar certificate was issued to the Hutchinson, Kan., Interurban Company to issue $65,000 in bonds for the purpose of taking up certain floating indebtedness.

Free Capitol Site

A new scheme for raising the $1,000,000 pledged by Oklahoma City for a free capitol site is reported to be brewing. It contemplates the purchase of the "Northwest site," set aside for capitol purposes by the city for a public park and the voting of a $1,000,000 bond issue, the money to be used in the construction of the capitol. According to the plan the city will then sell the lots to reimburse the city for the bond issue and the land remaining after the lots are sold to remain in a public park.

News About Crops

"Two-thirds of the Kansas wheat crop was in the shock last Saturday night," stated Oscar K. Lyle, expert for S. B. Chapin of Chicago and New York. "Last week I estimated the Kansas crop at 70,000,000 bushels of wheat but I am not overconfident that the state will produce that much. The dry and hot weather of the past week or so has done much damage yet the indications are that Kansas will produce a little more wheat than it did last year."

Officers of the Oklahoma Grain Dealers Association estimate that Oklahoma will produce but 8,000,000 bushels of wheat as against 26,000,000 bushels last year. It is also stated that the standard of the crop will not be up to that of 1910 as indicated by a portion of the crop already placed on the market.

Dealers report practically the same condition existing in Texas as that reported in Oklahoma. It is estimated that the crop of the Lone Star state will yield between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 bushels which will be about one-half the normal yield.

Miscellany

Figures given out by the Kansas state tax commission show a net increase of $7,830,873 over the assessed valuation of a year ago in the Kansas public service corporations.

John W. Davis, receiver for the Citizens Railway and Light Company of Fort Worth, Tex., announces that the property of the company will be offered for sale July 1st.

The Huntington Bank closed its doors June 12th. It is said the depositors will be paid in full.

Bemidji Convention

President L. A. Huntoon delivers an intensely practical annual address to Minnesota bankers

At the opening of this convention I wish to congratulate the Minnesota bankers upon the multitude of good things that fall to their lot within the year. I wish first to congratulate you upon the fact that the Minnesota bankers are loyal to this association as is shown by the fact that, although the executive council found it necessary to recommend to the association last year the increase of annual dues, only 16 of the old members failed to renew their membership on that account and there have been added 53 new members, making the total membership to-day 920, the largest in the history of the organization.

I wish to congratulate you upon the crop outlook which in our section and in many other parts of the state is the best for many years.

I wish also to congratulate you upon the ease with which we seem to be passing through a period not of stringency, but of a gradual readjustment of business after a period of extreme activity.

And I wish to congratulate the association for having among its members, and the people of Bemidji upon having among its citizens, the bankers of Bemidji, who have the enterprise to to-day entertain this convention, and I predict for them in this, as in everything else, abundant success.

Now, may I talk shop for a few minutes?

Some years ago this association considered a matter which has never been lost sight of by some of you, and that is the relation of the banker to the surety companies. The total amount paid in the state of Minnesota to the surety companies on burglary, fidelity and surety bonds during the past year was $588,737. The amount paid by the surety companies for losses was $176,425. The premiums on fidelity insurance, $213,946, losses $24,871, and I do not believe the past year was an unusual one. I presume 25 per cent of the receipts is paid to agents for securing the business, but the 75 per cent remaining is largely in excess of the amount required to conduct the business, pay the losses and pay a reasonable dividend. The tendency of the surety companies to seek and require a personal indemnity bond when a bank has been designated as a depository for the funds of municipal corporations and to refuse to issue depository bonds for the smaller banks of the state, is not to be commended from the bankers' standpoint. I am a thorough believer in surety companies and in the practice of having all bonds in connection with our business made by them, and am in no sense advocating mutual organization, except as a last resort, but the relation between us and the companies should be a different one than the one which now exists, and to that end I sincerely hope this convention will take some action looking to the appointment of a committee which shall make an investigation and make a report to the executive council at as early a date as possible.

This convention in my judgment ought by resolution to commend the work of the National Monetary Commission, and pledge them the co-operation of the bankers of Minnesota. Speaking for myself and not for the association, I sincerely hope and believe that some plan will be adopted which will give the benefit of the central bank, or the central reserve association to the state banks as well as to the national banks.

This association should keep constantly before our representatives in congress the fact that it is most desirable that an amendment to the National Bank Act be made providing that national banks may invest a portion of their deposits in farm mortgages, easily the safest and most satisfactory investment on earth; and I shall hope to see some concerted action taken by the national banks in the agricultural sections to the end suggested. The Minnesota Bankers Association might well take the initiative in this matter.

In the few moments allotted to the ordinary banker for reflection, I have sometimes wondered as to what was the real mission of the banker, and have many times come to the conclusion that there is written on our faces the story of our lives. There is no school provided where we may acquire an education for this calling except the school of experience, and it is not all of us who learn that to follow the loaning of money, the collection of interest and the clipping of coupons closely with no other object in life can, and does, make a little the smallest man in the community. A banker's work in his community is larger than this. He is constantly regarded as the leader in financial matters, and he should be the leader in other matters if he is capable.

In the last few years this association has made itself felt outside of itself, and your agricultural committee appointed two years ago has really been very helpful in making agricultural education a growing topic in this state and has done much to insure to the people on the farms and in the city the opportunity to acquire a scientific knowledge of the greatest industry of this state and in fact of the whole middle west. There are now thirty-eight schools in this state where agriculture is scientifically and practically taught.

Some of us smiled, when a city banker (Chapman) some four or five years ago, began talking about agriculture and agricultural edu-

Editorial Comment

FAVORS BANK SUPERVISION

President Joshua W. Miles, of the Maryland Bankers Association, devoted ninety per cent of his Deere Park speech to the advocacy of a new or improved bank supervision law for his own state. He commended the recently enacted New York statute and proved by irrefutable argument that banking in any form is not "private business" or a "personal matter." Maryland had a hard struggle to put banking under any sort of supervision and came through the fight about as Ohio did, by passing a law creating a first class banking department with hands and feet pretty well tied up. When the examiner finds a bank insolvent he cannot safeguard the public by closing it but he must inform the governor who in turn must inform the attorney-general and they must hold a conference and later tell the examiner what to do. Pretty slow job even if all of them try to push it along but no time is set for action and general failure is predicted.

President Miles went for the "private business" banker who got all the obstructions in the act pretty strong. His address is in this number and is well worth the time of the standpatters and the progressives. It ought to be circulated in Illinois, an almost virgin field, except that state bank supervision is here far advanced over the Maryland standard. The weak spot in Illinois is in having failed (in various ways) to put private banking under either restrictions or supervision. Failures have been so frequent of late that the Chicago daily press, and even the Chicago city council, have been trying to create public sentiment against wildcat, "private business" banking at the expense often of the duped and swindled depositors.

With a new constitution of a liberal text it will not be possible longer to use the prestige and resources of the state association to kill bank legislation looking to making banking safe and creditable. Chicago can furnish the "horrible examples" with a few down-state Butler incidents to season the exhibit. The progressives, the young men who put the group reform through, have the power if they have the courage, to do things of which all will be as proud after it is over and the benefits shown, as they now are of our splendid group system.

DISCOURAGING THE BANK BURGLAR

Several states have lengthened the term in prison for bank burglary with almost instantaneous effect. North Dakota reached a total of eleven such offenses in one year. The penalty was doubled and the very next year there was none. If the lengthening of the term works such magic bankers associations should bend their energies in this direction rather than so much toward other lines in the protective department. Of course long terms will not frighten any one if there isn't a reasonable chance of the capture of the offender.

It is said that the Wisconsin association was surprised when it went to Madison to ask that the penalty in the Wisconsin laws for bank burglary be increased. The association went up to ask that the penalty be raised from twenty to forty years and actually found that the goody, goody reformers had just had a bill passed reducing it to ten with a liberal parole provision which would have caused the professional yeggman to laugh in his sleeve. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty even in such cases. The friends of the yeggman and the misguided reformers are active and why not state associations?

The city hold-up man would vanish if a proper law was passed for robbery with a deadly weapon. It is a new form of crime and should be newly defined. Burglary and destruction of property by use of explosives should get a forty year term and thus make an end of it. Bankers associations should have a committee on protective measures to design and carry out a systematic campaign. Certain results will follow.

CONFIDENTIAL AND TRUTHFUL

"Never lie to your lawyer or your doctor," was good advice before banking changed from money-lending institutions to business building establishments. The old time banker profited by failure of customers. He fattened upon their ruin, but now, he builds up the weak and makes the strong stronger. Now the maxim should be "never lie to your banker, your lawyer or your doctor," nor, for that matter to any one. Not even the assessor.

Cashier Freeman of the Lumberman's National, at Portland, made an address to the threshermen of his state of whom there are about three thousand. Threshing there is done by contract and financed by the banks. In the course of his talk Mr. Freeman advised that:

There is nothing that a banker enjoys so much as to have a man who knows his business sit down and tell how he makes money and present figures to prove it. The thresherman of good reputation who can present a statement of solvent condition and who knows how many days, with a certain number of men, at a fixed schedule of pay, it will take to thresh a particular stand of wheat; how much it will cost to feed them; how many gallons of oil, and what kind of oil gives the best results; with an insurance policy covering his fire risk, and who keeps himself protected against employer's liability, need never worry about his payroll.

This certainly was proper advice and the wonder is that bankers when they talk to conventions, other than bankers meetings, do not oftener set themselves to tell their hearers how to keep solid with the bank. No part of the threshing business was nearly so familiar to Mr. Freeman as the banking requirements, and his hearers on the contrary had most to learn in the financial division of their own business. He further told them how to open and keep their accounts; how to figure profits, depreciation and costs of operation. He made it pretty plain that rightly kept books and honest statements would keep them "in good" with the banker. Threshermen were told that they might be ahead in dollars and cents each year but that when they were called upon to discard an old machine and buy a new one they might learn that they had been doing business at a loss. It was a practical talk and will serve as a model for bankers who address business and commercial associations.

President W. C. Wilkinson tells bankers the State banking law must be revised and rejuvenated

We have met to-day under auspicious circumstances. The last year has been, as a rule, a prosperous one in business, in North Carolina. The banks in the state have participated in this prosperity, and have been able to extend to their customers all necessary accommodations, and pay to their shareholders reasonable dividends upon their investments. In order to appreciate the proposed changes in the monetary system of this country, it will be necessary to recur to the past, and consider the banking system in force prior to 1863. I shall not enter into this more fully than is necessary, as we have with us, the Hon. Edward B. Vreeland, vice-chairman of the National Monetary Commission, who will explain to you fully, and in a manner far better than I can hope to do, the plans of the commission.

Prior to the late Civil War, in fact as late as 1863, the banking of this country was carried on and conducted by state institutions. The separate banks were chartered by their respective states, and allowed to conduct a banking business. Powers were conferred upon the separate institutions to issue their notes, to circulate as currency. Fourteen hundred and sixty-six state banks in 1863 had in circulation notes amounting to $238,000,000.00, and as each state had its own laws, governing the issuing of bank note circulation, it was almost impossible to discriminate in accepting these notes, as the value of the majority of the notes depended upon the solvency of the bank issuing them. In many cases, the notes were almost or entirely worthless, as the issuing bank had no reserve with which to redeem them when presented for payment.

This brought about great difficulties in transacting the business of the country, and congress was urged by many financiers to devise some plan of giving the country a more uniform bank note circulation. In 1863, as a war measure, the national banking system was devised, in order to get the gold held by banks and to create a market, for government bonds. By this plan the obligations or bonds of the government, were made the basis for the issue of currency by the banks, organized under this act.

All such notes were issued by the government, upon the deposit, in the treasury, of government bonds, the government redeeming them upon presentation and reissuing to the banks new circulating notes for such as were redeemed.

The banks that did not organize under the act of congress, known as the national banking act, enacted in 1863 and re-enacted in 1864, were taxed in 1866 to such an extent on their circulating notes, that they were forced to relinquish the circulation privilege.

Under this act of congress a uniform currency was established throughout the United States, known as the national banking currency, and as all such notes were issued by the government and redeemed by it, the note of a bank in a small town passed as current as that of a bank in the largest city, as neither the capital or the solvency of the bank upon which it was issued was taken into consideration in accepting the note.

Up to this point the system was ideal.

But there was one serious defect in the system, which congress attempted to overcome and correct, but without effect.

This objection to the system was, and still is, the want of elasticity in times of stringency or panic, to enlarge the circulating medium, and to decrease it after such need has passed.

There are other minor objections, which I have not time to discuss, merely throwing out the one mentioned above as the leading objection to the plan.

Since the adjournment of our last convention, the national congress has authorized the establishment of postal savings banks, and a number of them are now in operation, and while it was the general consensus of opinion that the government had no right to enter the banking business, it is now the belief of bankers, generally throughout the country, that the establishment of these banks will not to any great extent interfere with the deposits of regular commercial and savings banks.

Our state legislature was in session this year, and many questions affecting the banking interests of our state, were considered.

I am glad to report that no single law was enacted detrimental to your interests.

A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED. ACCOUNTS OF BANKS AND BANKERS SOLICITED. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

A letter was sent to and received by a number of the members of the legislature, in which it was stated that "Banks pay no taxes," but notwithstanding this attempt, to increase your already heavy tax burden, more favorable legislation was enacted, pertaining to banks, than at any one session of the legislature in recent years.

That concessions were made in bank taxation was due to the hard work of your committee on legislation.

The members of this committee devoted much of their valuable time to have laws enacted that would place the taxation of bank shares on a more equitable footing and preserve somewhat an equality with other kinds of taxable property.

At the last session of our legislature a bill was introduced, remodeling the banking laws of our state, which bill, however, was submitted to a number of the officers of banks operating under state charters but did not meet their approval, and the finance committee reported it unfavorably and the bill was not passed.

I think you will all agree with me, however, that the time has come when it is advisable to revise the banking laws of this state, and as the revision will largely concern those banks operating under state charters, I recommend that a committee consisting entirely of officers of such banks, and in addition the chairman of the committee on legislation, be appointed or elected by this convention, to prepare a bill, revising the banking laws, and submit it to our next convention for its consideration, and when approved by the convention, that the committee on legislation be instructed to present the same at the next session of the legislature for enactment.

I would respectfully suggest that this committee consist of the officers of the association connected with state banks and trust companies, the chairman of your committee on legislation, and two other members, from state banks.

In conclusion allow me to express to you my sincere thanks for the honor you have conferred upon me in calling me to act as your president during the year and to preside over your deliberations at this meeting.

PROGRESS IN BANKING

books, by converting them into live credits, passing from hand to hand in the form of banknotes, possessing and exercising debt-paying and credit liquidating power.

The growth of knowledge, the dissemination of intelligence, the rapidity of communication, the increasing needs of mankind growing out of the complexity of our civilization, all tend to increase the struggle for individual subsistence. New principles of social welfare have been accepted, and others are about to be established. They involve a revolution of material conditions. We in common with other enlightened nations are approaching a condition of economic maturity. We cannot afford any more to disregard and ignore the agencies of defense and the instruments of protection which other nations use economically and financially in their trade relations, than we could afford to disregard the means of military and naval defense which they use.

The establishment of some kind of central reserve association for all these reasons, has become a national necessity. If organized according to the plan suggested, it would as a bank be as great as our country is great; it would possess strength and powers adequate to the country's needs and equal to all its demands. Such an institution would be a lasting monument to the financial genius of this generation. Our country needs it. We must and eventually will have it. It is to be hoped that we shall not be called upon to pay the price of another panic before it shall be given us. I trust that before adjournment this convention may unanimously approve the plan and by an affirmative vote urge the members of congress from the state of New York to work for its speedy enactment into law.

NOT A BANK FAILURE

During the recent annual convention in Sioux Falls of the South Dakota Bankers Association, attention was called to the fact that during the past year there had not been a single bank failure in South Dakota—a record of which every resident of the state will be proud. During the year there had been only four attempted bank robberies in the state and each of the culprits were captured. South Dakota now has a total of 636 banks—102 national and 534 state banks.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL OF DULUTH

Among the strong Northwestern banks, the American Exchange National of Duluth with a capital and surplus of $1,500,000 always attracts attention. The deposits are $7,300,000 and the bank has first class facilities for making collections and remitting promptly. The officers of this bank are among the most loyal supporters of the Minnesota Bankers Association and the meeting at Bemidji is about the first one that Cashier William G. Hegardt has missed. He is spending the summer in Europe which was all the excuse which was necessary. Hamilton M. Peyton is president and is well known in the state.

RAPID GROWTH OF GUARANTY TRUST

The latest statement of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York issued June 7, 1911, in response to the call of the state superintendent of banks, exhibits very large totals. The deposits are over $144,000,000, a gain of $11,000,000 since the last call, February 28th, and a gain of over $20,000,000 since January 1, 1911. The total resources of this institution, which is now the largest trust company in America, exceed $186,000,000. Its growth to the present proportions has made necessary a much larger office than is available at its present location on Nassau Street, and a site at the corner of Broadway and Liberty Street recently has been purchased whereupon will be erected a monumental building which will be used exclusively by the company. Plans for the new building which are now being prepared contemplate a model structure in every respect.

PACKERS' NATIONAL

The Packers' National Bank of South Omaha celebrated the twentieth anniversary of its organization recently. When it opened for business it had a capital of $100,000 and its deposits were not much greater than its capital. To-day its capital is $200,000 and its deposits amount to $2,200,000. The present officials of the bank are: A. W. Turnbull, president; J. F. Coad, Jr., vice-president; W. A. C. Johnson, cashier; Harry Turnbull and T. J. Shanahan, assistant cashiers.

CHAPTER RECORD

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the American Institute of Banking in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Systematic Education and Universal Membership

GEORGE E. ALLEN TAKES OPTIMISTIC STAND

Spokane.—"Viewed from every angle and taking everything into consideration conditions throughout the country present a most promising outlook, and there is every reason to believe that as a nation we are upon the threshold of an era of activity and progress."

George E. Allen of New York, director of educational affairs of the American Institute of Banking, said this in an interview here. He added:

"Probably one of the best signs of returned prosperity is the $600,000,000 bond issue announced by the Great Northern Railway Company. That will tend to have the best sort of an influence. It means something to the public, which actions of the big corporations have not meant in some time. It means that the railroad heads are cognizant that money is available and, naturally, they will take steps to bring it from under cover. The result is to be a strong investment market and good times."

"Wall Street manufactured profits on a half-inch of rain a couple of weeks ago. The members measure profits by the rainfall. The crop conditions are fine. This rain has quite entirely changed the outlook, and the fact that there is plenty of money available means that we have only to sweep away psychological fears to bring back complete confidence in business."

"When the new national reserve plan, the so-called Aldrich plan, is put into effect it will be by the people, and not by the bankers. That plan, or whatever plan is worked out, will be worked out on a basis of using farm products, wheat, corn, oats and cotton, principally, as security for the $600,000,000, or whatever is needed annually to move these same crops."

"Bonds, stocks, minerals and that sort of thing will not be the basis of security. We are the only nation of any size which does not make farm products the basis of security for loans to move these valuable crops. We are bound to come to it."

"I do not think this next regular session of congress will pass that bill. The democrats, naturally, will have the chance to get in and remodel it so that they can take credit for it. Then, too, it will take a little time for the farmers, and the public at large to get acquainted with that bill, and the plan will become law just as soon as the common people want to. Let the people say that they want that bill and congress will pass it like a flash."

"The bankers have nothing to gain by that bill. They can make more money if they want to under the old system. The difficulty which the farmer experiences in moving his crops under the present system can be turned to exceeding profit by a banker if that banker really wants it. But under the proposed system they will not be able to do it. We will have this system just as soon as the people understand it. And then, instead of paying 8 per cent on money out here and 3 and 4 per cent in Wall Street, the rates in the different parts of the country will be more nearly equalized."

Thomas R. Preston

Thomas R. Preston, president of the Hamilton National, Chattanooga, represented President F. O. Watts of the A. B. A., on the North Carolina program at Lake Kanuga. He spoke on the American Bankers Association and paid a strong tribute to the National Reserve Association plan, which he fully explained. Concerning the A. B. A. he said in part:

What is now the American Bankers Association was organized at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., thirty-six years ago. The call for the convention was signed by seventeen prominent bankers, only two of whom are now living and actively engaged in the banking business, Geo. F. Baker, chairman of the board of the First National of New York City, and Col. Logan C. Murray, president of the American National at Louisville, Ky.

The necessity for such an organization was made manifest by the panic of 1873. There was in attendance at the first convention about three hundred leading bankers from all sections of the United States, and from this small beginning has emanated the greatest banking organization in the world, if not the most powerful organization of any class of business, the membership of which is now composed of approximately twelve thousand of the leading banks from every state in the Union.

This association has taken a leading part in solving some of our most important financial and industrial problems. So great has the work of the association become, that it has of necessity been divided into sections. The trust company section is devoted exclusively to the trust company business. The savings bank section exclusively to the welfare of savings banks, the clearing house section to matters pertaining to clearing house management, the American Institute of Banking section is devoted to the education and training of men for the banking business. There have been other subdivisions of the work of the association, one of the most beneficial of which has been the protective feature, which was undertaken eighteen years ago. The duty of this department is to arrest professional criminals of every character who prey upon the banks that are members. The association is in possession of the record and photograph of over six thousand professional crooks and forgers. Some of the information obtained has been of most unusual character. But a few months ago the record of a Russian Jew was obtained, which showed that he had joined the army nine times, deserted eight times, had been three times in the penitentiary for forgeries and other crimes, was then a fugitive from justice, and only thirty-eight years old.

Mr. Preston took up the sections and departments in detail and pleased his hearers very much by his fairness to all concerned in the upbuilding of the great A. B. A.

GROUP FIVE, INDIANA

The annual meeting of Group Five of the Indiana Bankers Association was held at the Hotel Lahr, Lafayette, Indiana, Thursday, June 15th. More than ninety bankers from over the district were in attendance. A delightful luncheon was served to the members of the group in the dining room of the Hotel Lahr at 1 P. M. After which a very interesting program was rendered. The reserve association plan for monetary legislation was ably and entertainingly discussed by Walter J. Ball of the Lafayette Loan and Trust Company. After Mr. Ball's talk a resolution was adopted favoring the plan. The secretary of the group was instructed to send a copy of the resolution to each congressman and senator from Indiana. One of the most interesting talks of the meeting was made by Prof. John H. Skinner of Purdue University. His subject was "Conservation of the Soil." Prof. Skinner treated his subject in a most pleasing and attractive manner and his talk was greatly enjoyed by every banker present. Prof. Skinner made it plain why bankers encourage the farmer to raise more products on the farm. Showing conclusively that this could be easily done and the deposits in our banks largely increased by a little attention to scientific methods of farming. Chas. L. Goodbar entertainingly discussed "Bank Advertising."

The officers elected for the following year for Group Five are as follows:

Chairman—Chas. L. Goodbar, Crawfordsville State Bank, Crawfordsville.

Secretary—Wm. Kirkpatrick, Corn Exchange State Bank, New Richmond.

Executive Committee—Walter J. Ball, Lafayette; W. P. Sidwell, Frankfort; J. S. Royse, Terre Haute; H. F. Bucklin, Brazil and T. Reid Ziegler, Attica.

J. L. Randel, Central National, Greencastle, was named for the nominating committee of the state association.

PITTSBURGH WINS DEBATE

One of the features of the program at the Pennsylvania Bankers Convention was a debate between the Pittsburgh Chapter, American Institute of Banking, and the Scranton Chapter on the subject:

"Resolved, That our banking system should be changed so as to increase co-operation among units, even to the cost of a lessened individualism."

The victorious affirmative was upheld by the Pittsburgh team, composed of Fred G. Lancaster, Keystone National Bank; D. H. Thomas, Commonwealth Trust Company; George H. Rankin, Central National Bank; S. M. Shelly, Bank of Pittsburgh; while the negative side was argued by John Benfield, First National Bank, Pittston; Charles S. Ross, Traders' National Bank, Scranton; John Greiner, Jr., Lackawanna Trust and Safe Deposit Company; George B. Dimmick, First National Bank, Scranton. The Pittsburgh bankers, by winning, retain the silver cup offered as a prize, for another year.

Proposed Participation of Trust Companies

There is no subject discussed by those interested in banking affairs in this country at present which compares in interest and importance with the movement to secure real currency reform. It would seem as if the discussion had now reached a point where the prediction is justified that the monetary legislation to be finally enacted will be based upon the plan of the National Monetary Commission. The ready acceptance of the general principles laid down in this plan by business men everywhere, as well as by many of the banking experts of this country and Europe, shows that the time is ripe for its enactment into law.

In view of the probability of action by congress at its next session in December, it is of vital importance to those interested in trust companies throughout the United States to consider their part in the plan as it stands at present. There is no doubt that, if it be found advisable to change the plan in any particular, the best time to do so is before the legislation is enacted, rather than to amend it subsequently.

In the plan submitted by the commission it is contemplated to establish a new class of national banks, which are to be "in effect national trust companies, to be designated by some appropriate name and to exercise all the functions and have all the privileges, including length of charter, which are given to trust companies by the laws of the various states." As a result of this provision, Mr. Aldrich was invited to address the trust companies of the United States at a dinner given by them for the express purpose of hearing more in detail his suggestion on this all-absorbing subject. He frankly stated that he had given comparatively little study to this feature of his plan, and would welcome the freest discussion from those interested in trust company affairs.

The dinner was given in New York City May fifth, nineteen hundred eleven, and was a representative gathering of officers and directors of trust companies and, in addition, bankers from all parts of the country. Senator Aldrich spoke to the subject of the "Relation of Trust Companies to Monetary Reform." After referring to the general features of the plan as applied to banking as a whole, he referred to the phenomenal growth and success of trust companies as compared with national or state banks, and assigned as the cause the much wider range of profitable business which they are authorized to transact, without the same restrictions as to the extent of their legal cash reserves against deposits. He placed himself firmly on record as to the utmost importance from a broad public standpoint, as well as for the safety and welfare of the banks themselves, that there should be a complete unification in one comprehensive system of all our banking institutions; stating that, if co-operation is desirable for the 7,000 national banks, it is much more desirable that the 16,000 state banks and trust companies should be included in any plan for concerted action or joint responsibility. However, he stated that after most careful consideration of the subject of nationalizing state banks and trust companies he had reached the conclusion that, in view of the diverse interests involved, the obstacles in the way of nationalization are insuperable, and that our aim must be to accomplish the desired results with as little disarrangement as possible.

Accordingly, it was suggested that state banks and trust companies should be admitted to participate upon reasonable terms in the advantages and responsibilities of the proposed National Reserve Association, but that such membership must be upon the terms and conditions fixed by national legislation. Among these is the requirement for uniform, reasonable reserves against deposits. This and other requirements would render necessary co-operative legislation by all the various state legislatures; such, for instance, as, that the deposit balance of any bank or trust company in the reserve association, and the notes of the association, shall be counted as a part of its legal reserve.

As you are doubtless aware, the Currency Commission of the American Bankers Association unanimously approved the general principles of currency reform embodied in the plan and appointed a special committee of five bankers of national reputation to carefully consider the nationalizing of savings banks and trust companies, and to prepare a special report thereon. This committee reported definitely against the proposed nationalization, and in favor of the participation of existing state and savings banks and trust companies under their present charters and organizations, with certain reasonable provisions regarding capitalization, reserves, and examinations. This report was presented to the executive committee of the trust company section of the American Bankers Association at the executive council meeting in Nashville, Tennessee, last month, as this committee is the only organized body solely representing the sentiments of the trust companies throughout the United States.

After a full discussion of the whole subject, it was

Resolved: That the executive committee of the trust company section of the American Bankers Association heartily approves the plan proposed for the organization of a National Reserve Association, and of the modifications thereto suggested by the special committee appointed by the Currency Commission of the American Bankers Association, at its meeting held in Washington, March 28, 1911, especially that portion of the report of the Special Commission defining the terms upon which trust companies may subscribe to capital stock of the National Reserve Association.

This approval, however, being subject to the following exceptions:

First—As to reserve required to be maintained by trust companies in central reserve cities, and reserves required to be maintained against trust funds not subject to immediate withdrawal.

Second—As to amount of paid-in capital to be required of trust companies, proposed in the report of the special committee.

Third—As to limitations upon character of notes that may be discounted by the National Reserve Association.

The special committee of five thereupon amended its report, so far as it related to trust companies, substantially along these lines, and the amended report has been made a part of the report which the executive council will submit, with its unanimous endorsement, to the American Bankers Association at the next annual convention, to be held in November at New Orleans. If the association approves of the plan as thus amended, there is good reason for assuming that the amendments to the plan will be favorably received by the National Monetary Commission, which is expected to report to congress in December.

Therefore, it is urgent that all who are interested in trust-company affairs should study this subject carefully from the broadest point of view, to the end that the statute, when finally enacted, should represent the best judgment of all who by study and experience are competent to express their views on this most important legislation.

Safeguarding Commercial Paper

Kelsey S. Chase, Supt. of Banks of Minnesota, recommends a State Credit Department on strong paper

Bemidji, June 21.—State Superintendent of Banking, to-day reported to the bankers convention upon their resolution passed last year looking to the registration of commercial paper and the establishment of a state audit and credit department as a part of the department of banking. The paper was long and exhaustive, covering the subject in all its forms. Mr. Chase supported the idea very fully. He said in part:

The practice of testing credits once each year by requiring all outstanding notes to be paid out of the assets of the business is forgotten and should any creditor require payment of his notes, it simply amounts to a test of the ability of the borrower to borrow from some one else and not a test of the borrower's ability to pay. This practice of shifting debt has led us upon dangerous ground. The tendency increases the dangers of business and converts funds loaned for a few months' time into permanent capital, as the continued possession of the funds lulls the borrower into a feeling of confidence and safety.

The brokers are, however, not the only ones to blame for this condition; the bankers themselves are responsible to some extent. The banker who manages the small bank and has a surplus of funds on hand makes little effort, as a rule, to decide for himself the worth of any paper offered him. He usually asks the opinion of the note broker as to which are the best names and checks this up with the information received from his correspondent banker. It is rare indeed to find the small bank with even the crudest kind of a credit file. The best kind of safeguards that can be devised may be thrown around the issuance of commercial paper and it will not protect the banker, who will not make an effort to place information in his own possession so that he can intelligently use his own judgment. Whether you may agree with me in this or not, there can be no question as to the desirability of correcting some of the abuses and safe-guarding the issuance and sale of commercial paper.

How best to do this is a question in which we are all vitally interested, and it does not seem too much to expect that from the object lessons which a large number of Minnesota bankers have had brought home to them during the past few years and on account of the large amount of money lost by them in commercial paper during that time, we should evolve some plan that would place issues of commercial paper on a higher level so that the banker may feel secure with that class of investments for assets.

At the annual meeting of the Minnesota Bankers Association held at St. Paul a year ago, the following resolution was adopted:

"We commend the attitude of firms and corporations who sell their paper in the open market in furnishing independent audits of their business by responsible certified public accountants."

"And, whereas, we believe such independent audits are of great value, both to the borrower and lender,

"Therefore be it resolved, that we recommend this practice becoming general, and we further recommend that the affairs of all firms and corporations which are in any way identified with each other be audited by such accountants as of the same date."

Resolutions along the same lines have been adopted by associations in other states. The registration of commercial paper is only a step forward along the line of this resolution and is only a part of a proper and thorough audit of any firm or corporation offering commercial paper in the open market.

A generation ago a large proportion of the bankers of the country were opposing any publicity in regard to their financial condition, but they are now compelled to make a published statement so that the public from whom they are soliciting business may know the credit standing of the bank with which they contemplate entrusting their money. This publicity, although at one time resisted by the bankers, has redounded to their own benefit. In addition to this the banker must submit to an examination by a public officer representing the people.

This examination is primarily in the interest of the depositor and every banker believes it to be right. On the other hand, should not the firms and corporations who are soliciting loans from the banker be willing to make their true financial condition known to him and submit to an examination and audit carried on by someone acting in the interest of the banker as the public officer acts in the interest of the depositing public?

The committee on credit information representing the American Bankers Association reported adversely to maintaining a bureau of information covering the credit standing of all concerns whose promissory notes were offered to members. It would too seem hardly feasible for any state association to undertake to maintain a credit record of those firms and corporations offering paper to its members, nor does it seem advisable for the association to go so far as to employ accountants to carry on examinations of such concerns. The expense would be far too great with the result that the smaller institutions would drop out of the association and depend for their credit information as they now do upon their correspondent banks.

Then too, inasmuch as it would be impossible at all times to be absolutely correct with the credit information, the association would lay itself liable to libel suits in case its attitude toward a concern was not favorable. Certainly such an attitude could not be kept secret and the association would be bound to bring upon itself unfavorable criticism from the public. It would not take long for the people to believe that the bankers were discriminating against a certain class of borrowers and that they had united contrary to the interests of the borrowing public.

It would be entirely practicable for the department of banking to take up this work. Further legislation and larger appropriations for the maintenance of the department would of course be necessary. It is questionable, however, if it would be desirable to place this responsibility upon the state department unless such examination and audit would be satisfactory to the national as well as the state bankers within the territory.

The auditing by accountants recommended by a bankers association composed of representative bankers with a membership of a large proportion of the bankers in the territory is, it seems to me, the practical method and the one from which we could get immediate results without waiting for legislation. It is reasonable to assume that only accountants of known ability would be recommended. The accountants would be under certain obligations to the bankers association to delve and look into the business of each concern with more care and more diligence. They would undoubtedly take more time in their examinations and before they left the books of a concern, would be satisfied beyond a doubt that there was no secret set of books for the officers' use and another presented to them for audit. They would be quasi accountants for the bankers and yet the bankers would not be responsible for their acts. In other words, with the power to withhold or withdraw the recommendations of the association, it would have a right to expect the best of service from the accountant firm in return.

The interior banks at the present time are loath to invest in commercial paper and it seems to me that it is of sufficient concern to the merchants and manufacturers of the larger cities to interest themselves in some scheme

Banking news from Minneapolis—St. Paul financial center, and surrounding States, compiled by J. Edwards Smith

Resolutions were adopted by the Minnesota Bankers Association in convention at Bemidji approving the work of the national monetary commission, and covering the appointment of a committee for concerted effort to get a law passed to permit national banks to handle farm mortgages.

The plan was discussed also for an interstate bankers' convention including the Dakotas, Minnesota, Iowa and Wisconsin.

J. B. Forgan

J. B. Forgan, president of the First National at Chicago, was entertained at luncheon while at the National Credit Men's convention in Minneapolis by officers and directors of the Northwestern National of which he was cashier in 1888. While here Vice-President Joseph Chapman, Jr., showed him in the files of the bank a document in the handwriting of the cashier, Mr. Forgan, which he called a revised list of duties. This Mr. Forgan took to Chicago to copy and then return to the files. The rules were made by Mr. Forgan when he became cashier to put the bank on a good working basis.

After the general rules is a list of eighteen employees by name indicating what each man must do to handle his individual work properly. The eighteenth man on the list, now vice-president, was Mr. Chapman. The rules prescribe that each clerk must be at his desk at 8 A. M. and must not leave until the cash book shows a clean balance. Hilarity and talking on other matters except business are prescribed. The rules were effective September 10, 1888.

Interesting Comparison

Position of the St. Paul banks compared with that of 1883, when the Northern Pacific, its first transcontinental road in the North was opened, has made an interesting study for the bankers of the capital. Six national banks now have capital and surplus of $7,290,000 and deposits of $38,000,000. In 1883 the local banks all told had capital and surplus of $5,570,000 and deposits of $10,000,000. The capital exceeded by $1,000,000 the combined capital and surplus of all banks outside the two large cities.

Deposits in the savings banks and savings departments of other banks amount to $6,000,000, the State Savings alone has $4,385,000, compared with $4,250,000 three months ago. The amount on deposit with this bank is $400,000 more than a year ago.

Part of the increase in savings accounts comes from the deposits of the national banks. Several banks the past year have enforced the rule that a balance of $100 must be maintained.

Smaller depositors have been referred to the savings departments or savings banks and this has put many new savings depositors on the books.

Devises Means for Verifying Signatures

H. A. Willoughby, cashier of the First National at Minneapolis, has devised a means for business firms to verify signatures of customers on checks which they wish cashed, without incurring legal liability as having indorsed them. The firm simply hands the customer a card which reads that introduces Mr. Blank whose signature is given below and which the firms O K's on a line underneath. The customer goes to the bank with the check and the card, and the bank assumes responsibility for cashing the paper. The card is filed as a record.

Fine Arts Society

W. H. Dunwoody, president of the Northwestern National, is the first "benefactor" of the Minneapolis Fine Arts society. He has just been elected. Vice-President M. B. Koon is elected "patron," E. C. Cooke, president of the Minneapolis Trust Company; W. H. Lee, president of the Hennepin County Savings; F. A. Chamberlain, president of the Security National; F. M. Prince, president of the First National, "fellows for life."

National, was optimistic about the North Dakota crop. "Pot holes" are well filled with water and there is enough moisture.

Several Twin City bankers attended the group conventions in Minnesota last week and this and the various neighboring state conventions, including the meeting at Mason City, Iowa. The attendance at the Minnesota state convention at Bemidji reached about 400.

W. F. McLane, cashier of the Hennepin County Savings, has returned from a mortgage inspection trip on which he found a line running west through Mankato, Minn., dividing the dry from the wet territory. Southwest of this line he found the small grain crop 50 per cent. Fortunately that part of Minnesota last year furnished the big crop and the farmers are able to stand any loss. The corn crop is fine, however, and the acreage is above normal.

Organization has been completed of the fourth judicial district bankers in North Dakota. At a meeting in Lisbon, State Senator W. L. Carter, Richland county, was elected president; H. S. Grover, Lisbon, vice-president; F. W. Vall, Millnor, secretary; G. T. Webb, Ellendale, treasurer.

The Commercial State of St. Paul has been commissioned to do business. The capital is $25,000. Incorporators are J. H. Sullivan, L. F. Dow, H. F. Ware, St. Paul; W. E. Dickson, and M. E. Walsh, Stillwater; L. Redding, Lamberton; E. O. Hage, New Ulm.

A new bank is started at Bertha, Minn., capital $10,000. Incorporators are J. G. Gebhart, Robert Olson, Fred Lehy, G. F. Freeman, E. A. Perkins, L. H. Bartemiller, M. G. Whitesall and W. Will, Bertha; E. W. Smith, Parker's Prairie.

"Let every one catch the big, fine spirit of the Northwest and take all of it he can home with him," wrote James G. Cannon, president of the First National, New York, to the credit men in session at Minneapolis. Mr. Cannon was formerly member of the national association.

cation, but no one will doubt now but that this association through its committee has done many good things and in many instances the bankers individually have stirred up interest in their local communities along lines of better farming.

This is as it should be, for while we may resolve along all lines immediately connected with our own business and talk shop almost all the time when we meet in a business way and also when we meet in convention, it is in keeping with growth that we plan for things outside ourselves, not because of a strained selfishness but because of, as President Vincent would put it, a laudable larger selfishness which is not selfishness alone for our immediate material wants but a selfishness which includes in the word self our friends, our neighbors, the community, the state, and, as we strive toward the larger vision, so shall we be worthy members of the Minnesota Bankers Association.

THE CITY NATIONAL OF DULUTH

W. I. Prince, cashier of the City National of Duluth, is one of the active members of the Minnesota Bankers Association and has held prominent positions in its service. It has been appointed a government depository and enjoys the confidence of bankers everywhere.

Spokane, June 20.—Substantial increases in deposits, loans and discounts, surplus and undivided profits and cash on hand are noted in statements by 16 banks in Spokane at the last call of the comptroller of the currency. Deposits amounting to $29,431,980 were reported on June 7th as against $27,888,370 on March 7th; the total loans were $19,727,338, an increase of $954,406; the increase in surplus was $170,830, making a total of $1,794,790, and the cash on hand was reported as $10,481,083, as compared with $10,049,802 on March 7th. Local bankers say there will be ample funds to handle the wheat crop, adding that the outlook was never better for active fall business. All lines of trade report increased orders, and, while business is not as brisk as it was a year ago, there is much money in circulation.

M. M. Cook, cashier of the National Bank of Commerce, said in making an analysis of the financial condition of Spokane:

"This report shows more than any other in years that the bankers of the country have taught the people to be prosperous and at the same time to be conservative and economical. The speculation craze has been killed for a time, anyway, and people are not borrowing to gratify every little whim.

"There is plenty of money for legitimate business and development work. If there has been what seems to be ultra conservatism among the bankers it was to get people to liquidate a little and find out just where they stood. Money has not been tight, there has been lots of it, but after a year of drawing in, as it were, to get a new tack the people have learned that booming for speculative purposes does not bring any permanent good.

Business Normal

James C. Cunningham, secretary-treasurer and manager of the Union Trust and Savings Bank of Spokane, who has just returned from an extended eastern trip, said in an interview that business is more nearly normal than it has been for some time. He also reported there is plenty of capital available in the East and that the bond market is in excellent condition. Mr. Cunningham quotes Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank, as saying that conditions are what he terms "normal."

John G. Lewis

John G. Lewis, state treasurer of Washington, who handles between $6,500,000 and $7,000,000 a year, conducts his office at less expense to the tax payers than other state treasurer in the Union, according to a report by the state bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, officials of which checked his department recently. Inspector F. Leghorn says the plan is carried out successfully by making the Capital National Bank of Olympia do most of the work. The treasurer does not cash warrants, and carries no money on hand in his office. All the warrants, which are registered when written, are sent to the bank to be cashed. Each morning the bank submits all warrants cashied the previous day. The treasurer is protected by the surety bonds he has from the bank and in addition is saved from any trouble over forgeries. By not handling any cash an enormous amount of work in the office is saved and at the same time it is possible to keep an accurate check of the business.

Banking Miscellany

Life insurance companies paid policies totaling $436,500 in Spokane and $2,600,000 in the state of Washington, for 1910, according to a report just received from New York. Seattle headed the list with $887,000 and Tacoma was third with $231,000.

J. D. Miles, a banker at Miles City, Mont., said while here a few days ago that money is easy in eastern Montana, though the banks are more conservative than ever regarding the character of the collateral offered against loans.

H. A. Vanoven, president of the Beloit State Bank at Beloit, Wis., has bought 19 acres of apple orchard land in the Spokane valley for $6,975. Eight other residents of Beloit invested $33,000 in similar property and several will make their homes in the valley.

Directors of the Bank of Ralston, at Ralston, Wash., decided at a recent meeting to close the bank and liquidate its accounts through the German-American bank of Ritzville, Wash.

R. B. Walker, for two years treasurer of Benton county, Wash., has gone to Benge, to become cashier of a new bank.

F. A. Duncan, formerly a banker at Creston, Wash., has joined the Union Securities Company of Spokane.

J. P. McGoldrich, a director of the Old National Bank and head of the McGoldrick Lumber Company, who was a member of the board of governors of the National Lumber Manufacturers' association in Chicago, May 25th, said on returning to Spokane that the outlook for fall business never was brighter. "This," he added, "is especially true in the Northwestern states, where money now is easier than it has been in fourteen months."

Seattle

Carstens and Earles, Inc., investment bankers, have just received an order from Peru for some Seattle investments. Officers of the company state that of late a large number of inquiries for Seattle mortgages, bonds and other high-class investments have been received from foreign countries. The demand so far comes largely from Americans now residing abroad.

Mr. Spangler Speaks at Chehalis

Vice-President J. W. Spangler, of the Seattle National Bank, was one of the speakers at the meeting of the Southwest Washington Development Association held in Chehalis recently. Mr. Spangler chose for his text: "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," saying that he preferred that to the subject assigned to him: "Seattle's Attitude." Seattle, he said, had often been spoken for by men not truly representative of her. That applied to the legislative delegation. Mr. Spangler emphasized the desire of Seattle to help build up the outside districts, especially of Southwest Washington, and outlined plans already made for the work.

N. B. Coffman, of Coffman, Dobson and Company, bankers of Chehalis, and vice-president of the league, said in responding to the address of Mr. Spangler: "I cannot say enough in appreciation of Mr. Spangler's wise and temperate address. We felt that we were dealing with a man who knew and was entitled to speak for the city's business interests and as long as Seattle comes to us so represented cordiality will exist."

Trust Company Growth

A. A. Jackson, of the Girard, Philadelphia, points out the reasons for the popularity of this new form of banking

One of the best papers read before the Pennsylvania bankers, at the Philadelphia convention, was by A. A. Jackson, well known in trust company section circles. He said in part:

To one who takes trust companies as his theme for speaking, it seems almost as difficult to produce original matter as if there were nothing new under the sun. Books have been written, articles published, speeches made covering almost every conceivable phase of the subject. A few days ago in a catalogue of publications upon financial matters I found listed any number of writings upon all branches of the business and life of the trust company, in fact all questions relating to trust companies themselves, their surroundings, the effect upon them of local conditions and their place in the country at large and in its different sections, seem to have been expounded so well that there is little left to say.

The executive committee of the trust company section of the American Bankers Association found this very definitely the case when from time to time it asked for letters from members in all parts of the country expressing their preference for subjects to be discussed at the annual meeting. Many and prompt as were the responses few of them suggested ideas that had not been heard already in former meetings, and the new matter was very rare. If for that committee with its wealth of offerings it was hard to choose subjects for speaking upon, it has been the more difficult for me to gather ideas worthy of presentation to you since our president did me the honor to ask me to say something at this meeting about trust companies.

A. A. JACKSON
Vice-President Girard Trust Company, Philadelphia

Within the confines of Pennsylvania, where trust companies have existed longer than elsewhere, are now more corporations of this class than in any other state of the Union. Although in New York two companies still continuing honorable and successful careers were given trustees' powers prior to the delegation of those functions in 1836 to the Pennsylvania Company for insurance on lives and granting annuities and to the Girard Trust Company, nevertheless, the first named of these two Philadelphia companies still acts under the oldest charter of any such corporation in the United States, granted in 1812 when this commonwealth created the first of the long line of workers for the general good in this special field that has broadened as the years have passed, for the benefit, I submit, of the community and of their stockholders.

In 1899, before the convention of the American Bankers Association at Cleveland, Mr. Zug, the trust officer of the Commonwealth Trust Company of Philadelphia, delivered an instructive address on the "Trust Companies of Pennsylvania." At that time their resources aggregated a little over $200,000,000, with trust funds of about $400,000,000 more. The latest report to the banking commissioner of Pennsylvania from which figures have been compiled, made in November of last year, shows that these resources other than trust funds aggregate over $685,000,000 and

POSTAL BANKS FOR CHICAGO SUBURBS

Within a month Lake Forest and Winnetka will have postal savings banks running full blast. The two Chicago suburbs were among fifty towns and cities which were designated by Postmaster-General Hitchcock last week which will open to receive deposits on July 14th. The latest order makes a total of 700 postal savings banks established to date. Other nearby cities which were included in the order are Streator, Ill., and Crown Point and New Albany, Ind.

Postal savings banks will be established at Mt. Pleasant and Emmetsburg, July 3d.

Des Moines, June 22.—Des Moines bankers pronounce the state convention at Mason City last week as the best ever. The attendance was all that could be desired, the program was excellent and the social features were enjoyable in every way. There were no surprises when the election rolled around. E. J. Curtin, the live wire from Decorah, was chosen president without opposition William Heuer of Davenport, who was originally boosted for treasurer, was chosen vice-president. W. G. C. Bagley of Mason City was elected treasurer, and P. W. Hall of Sheldon was re-elected secretary.

The attendance at the programs was unusually large. This was due to the central location of the Willis Theatre where the programs were held. Automobile rides were always available and Mason City people were always ready to show off the advantages of the city. The party at Clear Lake on the closing day of the convention was highly enjoyable and was a social feature that will be long remembered.

Cedar Rapids secured the convention for next year. Des Moines was a receptive candidate. Simon Casady of the Central State in extending the bankers an invitation to Des Moines made it plain that the capital city always has the latch string out for members of the I. B. A. "Whenever you have no other place to which you care to go, come to Des Moines," he said.

The "Birthday Club," organized last year by G. E. MacKinnon, retiring vice-president and C. H. McNider of Mason City was much in evidence. The red buttons which Mr. MacKinnon secured were visible on every coat lapel. The organization bids fair to become more thriving with each passing year.

The new bank tax law passed by the last legislature was a much talked about proposition among bankers. J. G. Berryhill of Des Moines, in his address scored the law unmercifully. Later E. R. Moore of Cedar Rapids, one of the legislators, defended it. Resolutions instructing a test case were not acted upon favorably.

The sense of the convention was in favor of the Aldrich currency plan.

Secretary P. W. Hall reported fifty new members during the year so that the I. B. A. now has a membership of 1,450. The total attendance at the various group meetings was shown to be 1,590. Two bank robberies and five attempts were reported. The two robberies were the Farmers State at Garden City, December 1st with a loss of $800 and the Bank of Dow City, December 29th with a loss of $4,000. Fourteen arrests for forgeries have been made by detectives employed by the association within the past year.

Banking Change

Another important banking change is announced at Sioux City where John A. Magoun and B. H. Kingsbury have secured 75 per cent of the stock in the Northwestern National. This stock is that held by the estate of the late Abel Anderson. It gives Magoun and Kingsbury absolute control of the institution. The former will continue as president while Mr. Kingsbury has been made vice-president. The Northwestern National was organized in 1890 with Fred Evans as president. Abel Anderson was president for fifteen years but died shortly after the bank had completed its handsome bank structure in which it is now ensconced.

Death of David T. Denmead

David T. Denmead, president of the First National and the First Trust and Savings banks of Marshalltown, died very suddenly at Cincinnati, where he had gone to attend the funeral of George Kinney, formerly cashier of a Marshalltown bank. Mr. Denmead's death was due to heart failure. He had been suffering for some weeks and had confided to some of his friends a few days prior to his death that he had not long to live. He had been prominent in Marshalltown and central Iowa banking circles for years. His wife was with him when death occurred at the St. Nicholas hotel.

Request for Foreclosure of Mortgage Bonds

The Fidelity Trust Co. of Buffalo, N. Y., has filed in the federal courts in Des Moines a request for the foreclosure of mortgage bonds of $80,000, issued by the Centerville Waterworks Co. The trust company also asks for a receiver. The plaintiff alleges that the bonds are past due and the company has not redeemed them. It asks that the defendant be ordered to appear in court in September and subject its affairs to examination.

Secure Bonds

A. B. Leach & Co. of Chicago was the successful bidder for the bonds of $157,661 issued by the city of Des Moines last week in payment for the new Walnut St. bridge. The company pays for the bonds $161,334, which includes a premium of $3,673. Other bidders were Harris Trust and Savings, Chicago, $3,115 premium; Iowa Investors Securities Co., Des Moines, $3,051.90 premium; John Wheeler Construction Co., $3,000 premium; Merrill Oldham Co., $3,214.69 premium; Parsons, Son & Co., $1,584 premium.

Gets both Wife and Promotion

James D. B. Lambertson of Davenport had the interesting experience of getting a wife and a promotion the same week. The day he announced his wedding, on Saturday, to Miss Clara Holtzhauer of Wilton, he received notification that he had been elected cashier of the Farmers Savings at Victor. He has been draft teller at the Iowa National at Davenport, and prior to that time was connected with the DeWitt Savings at DeWitt.

Refund of Taxes on Bank Stock

Ottumwa bankers have been securing a refund of taxes on bank stock according to the ruling of Judge F. M. Hunter, based upon a decision of the supreme court. The case was applicable to several cities in the state, but Des Moines was not affected because the tax had not been levied in this city. The decision involved a technical construction of the law.

Banking Notes

Ernest E. Hart, president of the First National at Council Bluffs, has taken over the bank at Malvern according to reports which have reached Des Moines. Mr. Hart is one of the best known bankers in Iowa, largely because of his activities as republican national committeeman and his prominence in western Iowa financial circles.

Ed Fellner, clerk of the clearing house at Davenport, has been doing a little investigating. He has discovered that deposits in the Davenport banks have increased $4,158,111 or over 16 per cent in the past five years. Deposits are now $25,958,884. The per capita wealth of the city, judged from the deposit standpoint, is $603. Davenport claims that this showing makes her second richest city in the United States of its size, with Hartford, Conn., first.

The late P. M. Joice, the Lake Mills banker, whose death occurred while proceedings were pending in federal court relative to his alleged misapplication of funds, left life insurance of $15,000 with his daughter Carma as beneficiary. A Des Moines insurance company last week paid the girl's mother, as guardian, the amount of the policy.

The First National at Dexter has been authorized to do business. The capital stock is $25,000. F. F. Winchell is president; B. C. Hemphill, vice-president; M. F. Halmer, cashier; P. C. Monroe, assistant cashier.

Work has been started on the new building for the First National at Iowa City. The bank has been moved into new location while the new structure is being built. This is one of the oldest banks in Iowa and the first organized in Iowa City.

The Iowa State Savings at Tracy announces a new structure to be built this summer.

New postal banks have been ordered installed at LeMars, Onawa, Waverly, Fort Madison and Osage.

The contract has been let for a building for the Hubbard State at Hubbard to cost $5,200, and for the bank at Jewell Junction, to cost $8,568.

Three Mt. Pleasant capitalists, O. L. Van Syoc, J. T. Harrell and A. W. Palmer have purchased an interest in the Clarinda National.

Ralph Butler has been elected cashier of the Cylinder Savings at Cylinder.

The First National at Creston will make important alterations in its building this summer.

The Farmers State at Dyersville has let the contract for extensive remodeling and improvement of its building.

Out of city bankers seen in Des Moines recently included President William Mee of the First National of Gladbrook; President F. H. Starr of the Citizens of Milo; Cashier H. S. Taylor of the Woodward State; Cashier J. A. Mills, Farmers of Nevada; President J. H. Roberts, Farmers State of Boxholm; Vice-President J. S. Moon, Peoples National, Albia; President C. S. Allen, State of Laurens.

The Citizens is the name of a new institution at Little Cedar. The capital stock is $103,000. J. H. DeBuhr is president; M. Van Deest is vice-president; Amos DeBuhr is cashier.

J. W. Bryant has been elected vice-president of the Cherokee County State at Meridian and Charles Bryant has been elected cashier, succeeding W. W. Andrews.

The Farmers Savings at Victor has increased its capital stock from $25,000 to $50,000.

The People's State at Bayard has filed articles with the secretary of state. The capital stock is $15,000. J. W. Carush is president; O. O. Amanson is vice-president; W. H. Strauson is cashier.

The Postville State has filed amendments to its articles renewing its term of life for twenty years.

JOSEPH CHAPMAN AT OREGON

Speaking June 9th at the convention of the Oregon Bankers Association in Portland, Joseph Chapman, Jr., vice-president of the Northwestern National, Minneapolis, said:

"Senator Lafe Young of Iowa made the statement that the empire of Japan, with its 40,000,000 people, lives on less than the people of the United States throw out of their back doors every night. Some years ago even sleepy old England found out that the educational system of this country, as well as her own, would not do and a large percentage of clerks in the London banks were found to be foreigners. The average peasant of France is worth more than the average business man of the United States. The reason the United States cannot do business in South America is that it cannot compete with Germany. France and Germany are giving their children practical education to fit them to be self-supporting, while we train them to be educated loafers.

NEW BUILDING FOR INDIANAPOLIS

Jarvis Hunt, the Chicago architect, has prepared plans for the new structure to be erected on the site of the old Fletcher Bank buildings, Washington Street. The building will be 21 stories high—the highest in Indianapolis—will cost in the neighborhood of $500,000, and will be erected by the Fletcher Realty Company. The officers of the company are Stoughton A. Fletcher, of the Fletcher American National Bank, president; Miss Hilda Fletcher, vice-president; Charles Latham, secretary-treasurer, and Louis F. Smith, general manager. The company was formed principally for the purpose of managing the Fletcher estate.

The new building will have a frontage of forty-three feet and a depth of 120 feet. It will be an ornament to the business district, as particular attention has been given to the planning of a beautiful architectural effect. The exterior of the building will be a combination of stone, tile and brick, and the ornamentation will extend on all four sides of the building, making it complete in appearance from any viewpoint.

trust funds themselves $851,000,000. The growth therefore has been enormous, but legitimate, following the growth of the prosperity of the state and of its citizens. With its colleagues the national and state banks, the bankers and the savings funds, the trust company represents a place of accumulation and use for the moneys of the people and their corporations, and acting for them in ways that should not conflict with the business of these colleagues, it has a part in the life of the state that years since won recognition and is increasing daily.

The trust company should complement and not antagonize the bank. There should be no foundation for any disagreeable hint of jealousy between them—it is not apparent among the larger and broader institutions, and to be large an institution must be broad. With us the trust companies have their field; the banks have theirs, although both intimately joined. The trust companies as a rule, do not buy, nor can they under the law discount commercial paper. Their deposits ordinarily they give to the banks, with the exception of the money they keep for their required reserve and the transaction of cash business over their counters. All their great estate business that a bank of discount and deposit does not and cannot transact (I do not think it wants to) and all of this business produces money that may be said to be used in some degree in common by the trust companies and the banks. The fancied trespass on each others' domain I am prone to think exists for the most part in fancy only. If from time to time there seems to be an obstacle, a cumbersome method in the practice of business between the banks and the trust companies, attention is bent upon it with the desire to straighten out the tangle and establish a better method of procedure. Even if it takes time there results a bettering of conditions. At the present moment in this city we may find that by making haste slowly a solution will be reached of the problem of whether or not and how the trust companies at large shall enter the clearing house.

The powers from the legislature by the laws and special charters are broad enough to enable the companies to act in many fields, and, for the protection of their clients, the state government by an efficient commissioner of banking, keeps a watchful eye upon their doings. At unheralded periods the examiners appear at one office or another and stay until their thorough work is finished. No part of the company escapes inspection, and if there be need of criticism it is forthcoming. Perhaps in none other of the states is the examination as complete as by the department in Pennsylvania. In some of them there is no state supervision whatever, to cure which loose condition the trust company section of the American Bankers Association is bending strong energies, some have a bureau to which reports are sent, but by which no physical inspection of the companies is made; and some an admirable and effective supervision of all branches of the business of the companies save only of that large and intricate division in which is administered the estates of decedents and the many trusts. Perhaps at present Pennsylvania stands alone in examining by her banking department the assets of this part of the trust companies' work with the same care that it devotes to the other divisions of their offices.

In addition to the examination by the state it is the prevailing custom, absolute with the companies that are more particularly in my knowledge, to have drastic and frequent audits and inspections made by accountants or agents retained by the boards of directors, careful presentation of business to the boards themselves, and in Philadelphia the Orphans' court sends to us its duly appointed examiners with particular inquiry into the affairs of the trust estates. Those, therefore, whose relations are with a trust company of Pennsylvania should have a comfortable knowledge of the frequency of inspection of all its parts, and, let us hope, of the adequacy of them, and the cestui que trust whose estate is in its care knows that all the assets of its trust department are kept scrupulously separate and distinct from those of the company itself.

The commonwealth should form a happy environment for the corporate execution of wills and administration trusts. No direct inheritance tax exists to charge the shares of estates passing to those who may need them when death has robbed the family of its caretaker and support; the collateral tax is fixed in rate and does not by graduated scale ascend to abnormal figures against bequests to legatees, even though they be removed from the testator in the relationship, or be people or charities quite outside his family; the yearly contribution to the commonwealth upon assets subject to the personal property tax is under a sane law at a percentage apparently more just than those existing in some of our neighboring states whose citizens are tempted yearly to evade them.

The recognition becomes steadily clearer that the perpetual corporation, with its safeguarding capital and surplus, its efficient management and its machinery for discharging the duties devolving upon it, properly may take the place once occupied by the individual under wills and deeds of trust. The lawyer who often formerly held these offices still retains his intimacy with the business because he acts as counsel to the corporation administering an estate of a decedent whom he represented in his life time; the member of the family or the valued friend, to whom the testator was used to turn is still intimate in the matters of his estate, as by reason of his former close association with the dead he is consulted by the company upon details where his knowledge will be of benefit. The corporate executor and trustee strives to show its clients that their interests are taken care of by welcoming all aids from proper sources, and does not estrange them by any aloofness of complacent self-sufficiency. It tries to prove the fallacy of the charge of lack of soul, and to make evident that the members of the corporation, by whom it acts, are men of like nature, of like delicacy of feeling and of like perception with its beneficiaries.

To my mind, no matter the size of the company or estate, no trust is too small for consideration. Upon investigation, it is true, it may disclose qualities that render it impossible of acceptance, but by reason of these very collateral matters of which I have just spoken, and of one other, it should not be turned away without most careful thought. And that other reason is the moral responsibility to carry out the wishes of a decedent. Our companies are formed, inter alia, for the purpose of executing wills—we so announce—we say that a man's affairs will be safe in our hands after his death. If then, relying upon this profession, some testator without consulting us names us executor, and after his death we find before us for acceptance or for renunciation a small and perhaps difficult estate, does not our position, akin to that of a public servant, attach to us the moral duty not to refuse.

But to be in this position of preparedness the company must have a well fashioned organization, a staff whose members work together willingly, each one with the knowledge that his particular labor is for the general good, that he is an understudy for a higher place to which he may step at any time—and fortunate is the company whose practices, whose methods of discharge of duties, whose organization imbues its staff with the knowledge that they are part of a successful corporation whose success is coupled with integrity.

To be efficient in the varied functions that it may be called on to perform the company must be many handed, and each hand must be able. While it is acting as banker, as lender of moneys, as depository of securities and valuables in its vaults, as executor and trustee of the usual estates it may find itself an assignee to sell a business for the benefit of creditors, or a receiver to carry on large corporate enterprises in an endeavor to save them for their owners; by reason of control enjoyed by a decedent the company may be compelled to take his place in guiding the affairs of interest quite foreign to the usual field—for all contingencies it must be ready.

In a trust company, then, there is need of constant study to keep it ever fit to give proper service in the many positions where it may find itself, and to prove to its judges,—the clients, the customers, the courts, and the people—that it is worthy of call in each necessity.

In Pennsylvania the record shows a good account; few trust companies have gone wrong—perhaps here and there one has strayed after strange gods, has left the fold of conservatism, or has found itself not wanted in a field already well supplied, perhaps the schemes of the pirate of finance have compassed the formation of ephemeral bodies for the purpose of being bought out by those whose legitimate business they are designed to menace. They flourish for a space and die, or they achieve their end,—let them go in peace—they cannot shake the strong rock on which stands the base of integrity that is the ground work of success.

But even if the failure of one of these unsuccessful ventures proves the rule of the stability of the vast majority, each unfortunate happening makes necessary the greater vigilance for the protection of the good name of the clan at large, and the safeguarding of the public, our clients and our cause of being. It is a great and ever increasing debt we owe to it, that public, the people, who as individuals deposit with us their moneys to use in our business, secure in their knowledge that they can have it at their call, who as corporations entrust us with their settlements, their issues of millions of dollars of bonds, their registration of stocks, knowing that purchasers of them so have confidence that propriety of method has been observed, that public, the people who when they near the end of this life, having amassed fortunes in great or less degree, are comfortable in their minds, I hope, that those fortunes will be administered as they would have them by an executor, by a trustee, whose existence here is not limited to the three score years and ten, whose faculties, instead of failing with the crown of age, grow keener, whose capacity for work increases with its magnitude, and whose many sided usefulness is part and parcel of the machinery that moves this country forward as a nation of the earth.

THE MARINE NATIONAL OF BUFFALO

One of the very strongest banks in the state of New York outside of New York City is the Marine National of Buffalo. It has a capital of two millions and a surplus of $1,250,000. This strong capital gives it a standing and an influence in the western end of the state which is undoubted. The officers of the bank have been sturdy supporters of the New York association and have given good service in the American Bankers Association as well.

He says they were transferred to a better and more commodious boat without excitement and the full details of the trip carried out. Mr. Gates reports a good attendance and a splendid program.

THE CHICAGO BANKER,

407 Monadnock Block, Chicago.

BAPTISM, REVOLVER, JAIL

E. P. Fair, a banker of Centertown, Ark., has been sentenced to jail for one year and assessed a $500 fine for drawing a pistol on his brother-in-law, James H. Stroud. The trouble all resulted because of the difference of opinion on baptism held by the two brothers-in-law. Recently a baby boy arrived in the Stroud home. Fair, who is a Methodist, came around and wanted the baby sprinkled so its soul might be saved. Stroud said he was willing to take a chance on the saving proposition and refused to have the rite performed. A quarrel followed, also trial and sentence of a year.

A. A. JACKSON, Girard Trust, did do something fine in preparing his paper on trust companies for the Pennsylvania bankers. It will be found in full in this issue and is worth reading and preserving.

STILL they come! One letter from Iowa contained ten reservations for the Train de Luxe to New Orleans. Live bankers in the Iowa crowd.

PENNSYLVANIA lines from New York, Philadelphia, will operate two fine specials to the New Orleans convention. One will be "fast" and direct both ways through Atlanta. The other will make stops and side trips touching Asheville, Chattanooga, Chickamauga, and other view points. The trains will be the best and visitors from other cities who wish to return via New York can make reservations.

ROBERT E. JAMES, of Easton, and Joseph Wayne, Jr., of Philadelphia, were elected to the national council of the American Bankers' Association from Pennsylvania. Montgomery Evans, of Norristown, was elected national vice-president and Roland L. Taylor, of Philadelphia, to the national nominating committee.

SECRETARY W. C. MacFADDEN of North Dakota advises that "one of our members has just been indicted by the federal grand jury for handling drafts for liquor shipments with bills of lading attached. Members have been warned several times on this subject. Our attorney advises that the handling of such collections is illegal and that all such drafts should be promptly returned by members of the association."

E. J. CURTIN is now the big chief of the Iowa tribe, elected at Mason City, without opposition. He and a party of friends will make up a special car on the Train de Luxe to New Orleans. Iowa is going in strong force.

ARTHUR REYNOLDS was elected to the big council from Iowa which state enters him, tentatively, for the chairmanship at the next or subsequent meeting. Henry M. Carpenter's friends had put him in the race but on the idea of booming Reynolds, Mr. Carpenter withdrew and was the first to send in his congratulations. Iowa is very serious in the matter and feels that it is about her turn.

W. J. BURNS has been formally indicted for "kidnapping" the men who dynamited the Los Angeles Times building last fall while the bankers were en route to that city. Burns said then he'd "get them" and lots of other detective agencies we could name would like to be charged with doing such classy work.

KEEP your eye on Group Four. If she elects L. A. Goddard to the Illinois council it will be for a sign that the young progressives have girded their loins and buckled on their armor for a "clean-up" at Springfield. If you were at the preliminary skirmish at Cairo you about know what to expect.

FOR the big council, to be elected at Springfield, you hear of Lampert from the north and Crabtree from the south end of the state. Good men, both of them, and deserving.

VICKSBURG BOARD OF TRADE and the Vicksburg National Park Association have warmly invited the bankers to stop over long enough, on their way to or from New Orleans, to be taken through the Military Park. Illinois has spent over a quarter of a million on her share of the monuments. In some way the committee will undertake to decide the matter. If a stop is desirable on the way home it will be made. If only part wish to stop the big train will be divided.

SEATTLE NATIONAL, Seattle, has issued a trade and crop bulletin, neatly bound, and covering the fruit raising and other crops of the Northwest. Bumper grain crops and 75 per cent fruit crops are promised.

SUPERINTENDENT GEORGE C. VAN TUYL, JR., of the state banking department, New York, is considering a plan to divide the state into examination districts, and to place in charge of each district an expert examiner, who will be held directly responsible for the results obtained in his territory.

IF the plan is adopted the state will be divided into four examination districts, the western district with headquarters at Buffalo, to include banking institutions of Western New York; a central district with headquarters at Syracuse; an eastern district at Albany; and a southern district, in charge of the chief examiner, with headquarters in the New York city office of the state banking department.

VAN TUYL says: "When a bank fails it stays closed. There will be no reorganization under another name, with the same stockholders and a few new directors, as has been the custom in the past. My idea is that a bank that has failed once should be wiped out of existence."

THIS doctrine has caused great surprise all over the state for many states "point with pride" to reclaimed and saved banks. We shall see!

DELAWARE is the one state without a bankers association of any kind. Small and lonesome!

PROSPEROUS NORTHERN NATIONAL BANK

Big, imposing, modern bank buildings help business. J. W. Lyder, Jr., cashier of the Northern National, at Duluth, writes that "since moving into the new building with its modern quarters our deposits have more than doubled." The new building is one of the finest in Duluth and the Northern National one of the most active banks. J. L. Washburn is president, John G. Williams, vice-president and J. W. Lyder, Jr., cashier. Deposits are $1,467,652.68. Modern safety deposit vaults are maintained and the bank has a fine collection business.

DELEGATES and visitors to state bankers conventions have a warm spot for Frank D. Brundage and his "red spot" daily papers. He buys up all the papers, puts a K. N. and K. red sticker, advertising travelers' checks, and puts them in the chairs, cars, convention hall and dining rooms at the hotels. Big hit.

IOWA bankers, at Mason City, just riddled the report of the resolutions committee. The association was against testing by litigation the validity of the recent bank taxation legislation and against placing national and state bank examiners under civil service rule. It was in favor of permanent currency legislation, but refused to indorse any specific plan.

GROUP TWO, Illinois, met at Peoria, Thursday, with a good program. There was a luncheon at Creve Coeur Club and a fine talk by D. R. Forgan of Chicago. A boat ride on Peoria lake took up the afternoon. President F. F. Blossom presided and Geo. W. Curtis welcomed the visitors. Secretary William C. White reported.

which would win back the confidence of those banks. If this can be done by properly safeguarding the note issue of different concerns and properly auditing their accounts, the confidence of the country banker will be regained and the money which is a drug on the market in one locality may be employed in another locality where money is in demand, with both profit to the banker and to the merchant or manufacturer.

Steven E. Albeck

Steven E. Albeck, assistant cashier, National City Bank of New York, attended the Iowa convention and made a pleasant impression upon the correspondents of that great institution as well as other bankers. Mr. Albeck returned to Chicago with the Chicago bankers and left Sunday night for Minneapolis to attend the Minnesota convention.

GOVERNMENT SHY ON EXAMINERS

Comptroller Murray's attention having been attracted by comment upon the disproportionate number of state and national bank examiners, he has had a careful study made of the comparative resources of national and state banks in some representative states with a view to ascertaining whether the national service is actually scanty in comparison with that of the states. This investigation shows 447 state banks in New York (including 18 private) and 447 national banks. The government has only six examiners while the state has forty. The deposits of the state banks are over three billions, the national deposits just over one billion. It shows a six-to-one shortage in national bank examiners.
